Catherine Centeno, who retired two years ago after serving the Spanish department for 40 years, (see Autumn '72 News Letter, p. 1) died this July while summering in Spain.

Her daughter Catherine '68 (Mrs. David G. Thompson) was with her at her death, having joined her in Nerja the previous week when Mrs. Centeno became ill. Mrs. Centeno had directed the Middlebury Spanish School in Madrid in 1954-55 and in 1968-69. Her husband Juan, who died in 1949 of tuberculosis, had been dean of the Spanish Summer School from 1931 to 1947 and director from 1948 to '49. Catherine was named Lecturer in Spanish in 1949 and for many years had taught 17th and 18th-century Spanish drama and a popular seminar on Cervantes. She was a generous and warm-spirited woman who leaves many friends in Middlebury.

Bruno Schmidt, who taught geology at the College for 40 years, died this June at his home in Middlebury. He was 74. Born a subject of Emperor Franz Joseph, Bruno soon emigrated with his parents to North Adams, Mass. where he attended high school. Degrees from Williams ('22) and Yale ('25) followed, and he joined the Middlebury faculty as instructor in Geology in 1925. For the next four decades,

Before new facility named for him, Trustee-emeritus Paris Fletcher '24 receives from President Armstrong his 50-year pin as his wife, Marion, looks on.

Bruno was a devoted and conscientious teacher, popular with both students and colleagues—six years after he had retired, the Geology department named its new oceanographic-studies launch the "Bruno Schmidt." He was also one of Middlebury's most widely known public citizens who could walk scarcely 20 paces along the street without stopping to greet a friend. Bruno was an active communicant in St. Stephen's church, singing in the choir for many years, and served on the school board and held a half-dozen other civic responsibilities. He was also one of the most avid and vocal supporters of the College's teams over the years—particularly football and hockey. He is survived by his wife, Sabra, sons Richard '54 and William, and his daughter Linda.

In perhaps his last photograph, Mr. Schmidt is seen examining a new geology reference work given the College last spring by one of his former students, Kendall Carlson '50.

Len Hoag in North Carolina

When we ran Professor-emeritus C. Leonard Hoag's newsy letter this past winter, we neglected to reveal his retirement address. Former students and other friends who wish to write him and Mrs. Hoag should address mail to 5505 Revere Road, Parkwood, Durham, North Carolina 27707.

next summer. This entails clearing the fairways, rough-shaping the tees and greens, and laying the four or five miles of pipe for watering each tee and green. Then in '75 and '76 the crew will be fine-contouring the greens and bunkers, seeding grass, and planting trees where needed along the sides of the fairways. Thereafter, at least one full season of greens tending and fairway mowing will be required before play can commence.

The miles of underground piping are required because during dry periods each green and tee must be sprinkled an average of 10 hours per week. (Part of the crew works through the night moving hose and sprinklers.) The system consists of flexible black-plastic piping laid just below the surface, with drain valves wherever possible to minimize thaw-out time in the spring.

The present course was begun in 1929 by the Middlebury Country Club (organized in 1926) on 110 acres, most of which they had purchased from Edward D. Collins (professor-emeritus of Pedagogy, formerly director of the Summer Session, one of the founders of the Bread Loaf School of English in 1920, and acting-President of the College between Presidents Thomas and Moody). Collins lived in the house, overlooking the third fairway, since owned by Egbert Hadley '10. The Club adopted for its clubhouse the former farmhouse of Charles Matthews, the town's second milkman and known to all as "Red-headed Charlie."

Scarcely two months after the golf course opened, Wall Street experienced its "Black Thursday" and in 1936 the Club had to mortgage its property to the local bank. After the war, Egbert Hadley took the lead in gradually securing control of the property for the College. In 1954 the College, which had been leasing the course for its students since 1946, took over the mortgage and began to improve the greens and fairways. In 1963 it purchased the course outright from the now moribund Club, and over the next eleven years, under the loving care of Ralph Myhre and his crew, the course has greened into one of the sportiest in the state.

Ralph Myhre is himself an expert golfer, is active in the USGA, and has displayed an uncanny ability, in the words of College treasurer Carroll Rikert Jr., "to make minor changes which have major impact, to make major changes at relatively minor cost, and in a quiet but imaginative way to come up with an end result that invariably exceeds all expectations."

The new par-71 course will measure about 3,135 yards out and 3,405 yards back. There will be three par-5 holes, eleven par-4's, and four par-3's. The three longest will be the first (490 yards), eleventh (440 yards), and sixteenth (510 yards).

None of the estimated $100,000 cost comes from the 175th Anniversary Fund: an anonymous gift from one alumnus has made possible the happy expansion.

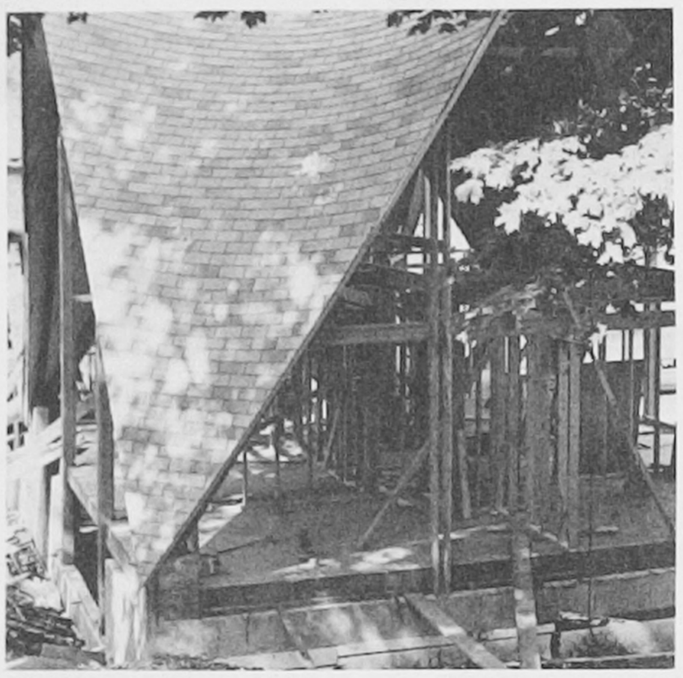
Residence Halls Named

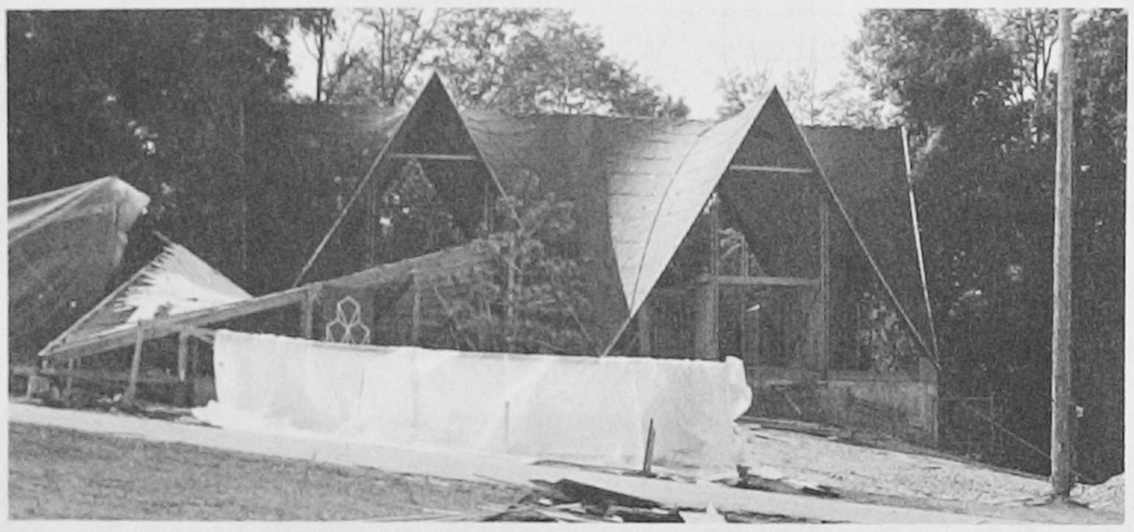
As reported in the Spring issue, Middlebury is erecting a pair of A-frame mini-dorms on the extreme north end of the campus, beyond the student-society halls (Freeman, Cook, and Hamlin). It has been decided that these new units will be named Atwater and Davis Halls, in honor of the College's first two presidents, Jeremiah Atwater, 1800-09, and Henry Davis, 1809-17. With Cyrus Hamlin, President 1880-85, these three are the only presidents to be honored on the portals of Middlebury buildings. (Atwater and Hamlin have now had two apiece.)

No less than five members of Faculty have been so memorialized—Charles Baker Wright, Arthur Brown, Perley Voter, Reginald Cook '24, and Stephen Freeman.

But Trustees are far out in front with fifteen buildings named for them: Painter, Starr, Warner, Mead '64; Hepburn '71, Gifford, Munroe '96, Battell '60, Carr '01, Proctor, Sunderland, Milliken '01, Hadley '10, Lang '17, and Fletcher '24.

Moreover, Allen Hall was named for the wife of a trustee; Egbert Starr Library was given by the son and father of trustees; and Stewart Hall was named for a family which provided two trustees—and six alumni. Only Pearsons and Dana are named for benefactors who never served on the board.





At left, views of mini-dorm construction in August; units are scheduled to open in January. Below, Trustees Jack Kirk '39 and Bob Rivel '42, in town for August Board meeting, seen on 1st green of College course.

Second Nine Holes

By the summer of 1978 the College expects to have a full 18-hole golf course in play. Until the second nine holes are ready, play will continue on the present nine, which were laid out in 1929. The second nine holes, many of whose fairways "interleave" with the present nine's, will be constructed by the College's eight-man Snow Bowl and Golf Course crew, using the College's own earth-moving equipment. The crew has been working this past summer clearing fairways for the nine new holes.

Four present holes (6,7,8,9) will be modified but holes 1 through 5 will be retained (although #2 becomes #9 and #3 becomes #10). Therefore 11 new tees, fairways, and greens will be constructed de novo and two others modified (#2, 3, 6-8, and 11-18). Ralph Myhre, manager of the golf course and the Snow Bowl, says they plan to have these 11 roughed out by the end of

To every alumnus who ever wondered what his prof looked like in his youth, a friendly challenge . . .

GUESS WHO?

OK, now, you stared at some of these faces for an hour, three times a week for months on end. How well did you observe and how much remember? Not to make it too easy, we've cajoled a baker's dozen of some senior faculty members into digging back into family albums to locate snapshots from their childhood—more or less.

With three exceptions everyone here has been on the Middlebury faculty for at least 15 years. Four are now emeritus. To help a little, their departmental affiliation is shown. Any alumnus identifying seven out of fourteen earns full Gloating Privileges at the next Alumni Club meeting.

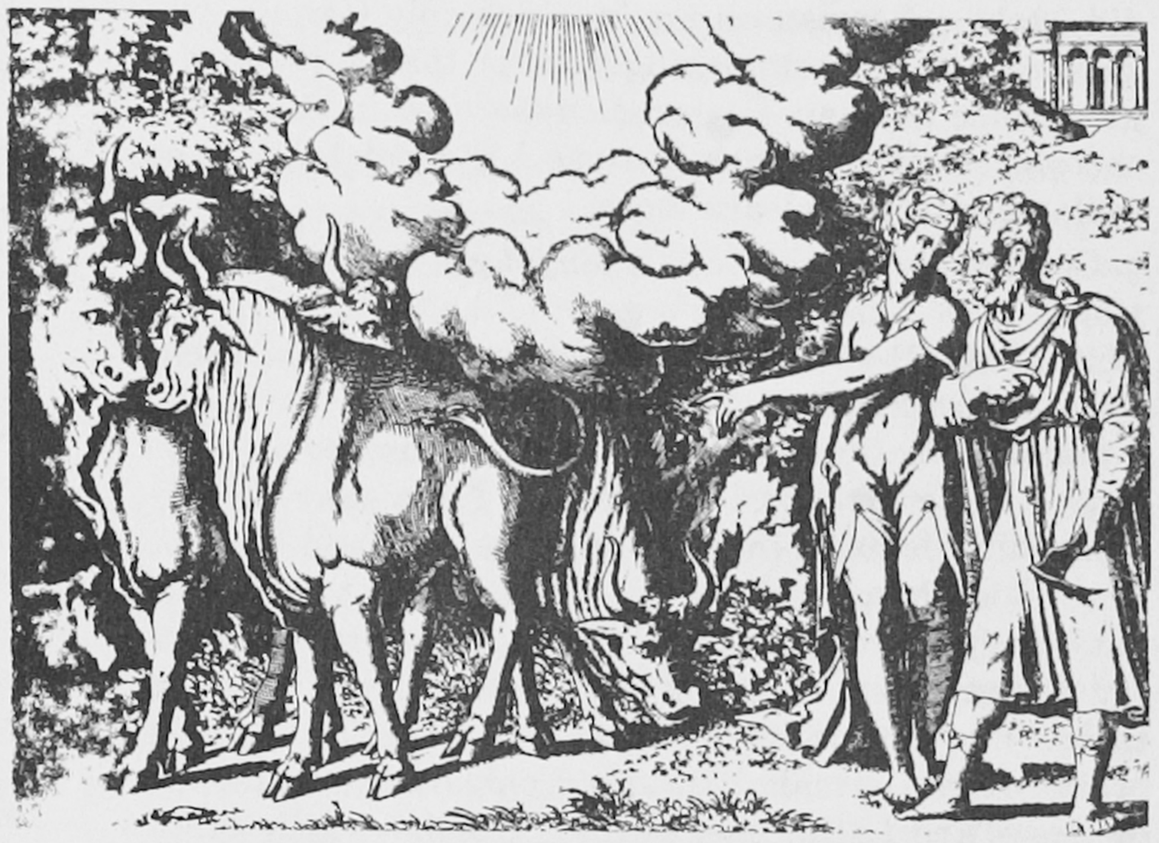
Confessions of a Language Learner



By William G. Moulton

From the remarks just made, you already know that I am a linguist and a language teacher. More important, perhaps, is the fact that all my life I have also been a language learner—and a passionate one. Furthermore, almost from the start I had at least an indirect connection with Middlebury.

My first foreign language was French. Though my memory for exact details is now understandably a bit hazy, I believe that it was in the second grade that I first learned to sing "Frère Jacques." We got the first two lines right: "Frère Jacques, Frère Jacques. Dormez-vous? Dormez-vous?" But we had our own delightfully original and nonsensical version of the third line. It went like this: "Celle mène tine, Celle mène tine." I don't know how to spell this, but I still know how to sing it. And the fact that it had no meaning did not bother us at all. Nor did it do me, at least, any harm.

My first serious learning of French began, as I recall, in the seventh grade. That would have been back in 1925. And my teacher, Richard Buffum, was fresh from a summer at Middlebury. Now there were two things about Mr. Buffum that puzzled us. First, he had a passion for phonetic symbols, and it took us some time before we realized how useful they can really be. Second, he outrageously insisted that French should be pronounced not with English sounds but with French sounds. Some of us actually managed to do this, more or less. I particularly remember how he taught us to pronounce French i and u. For i you stuck the point of a pencil between your teeth, grinned, and then said it: i, i, i. As for u, you kept the inside of your mouth in the same position, but instead of grinning you puckered your lips: u, u, u. I even remember the classic sentence he had us say in order to practice this sound. It was: "Une prune brune sur le mur."

My introduction to German was vastly different from this. Somehow or other, in French I had gotten a year or two ahead of myself, and our excellent but modest little school had run out of courses for me. So it was decided that I should learn German—to be taught to me in a class of one by the Latin teacher, who had once had a couple of years of German in college. And so for two years I learned German, taught just as if it were Latin. And I really mean that—just as if it were Latin. Why this did not forever ruin my taste for German I shall never know. But it didn't; and it didn't even stop me from learning German. This is an important point to which we'll return later.

From the start, then, I was exposed to two vastly different methods of foreign language teaching. And this continued right on into college. I shall never forget the difference between my French and German courses in my freshman year. In the French course, only French was spoken; and instead of translating our readings into English, we paraphrased each sentence in our own words in French—with excellent corrections and discussion by the instructor. As for German, each class went like this. The instructor started off by opening his copy of Heine's Harzreise and saying: "Let's see. Last time we stopped at page 48, line 12. Mr. Moulton, would you please begin translating at line 13?" And then for perhaps ten lines I stumbled through a miserable English mangling of this superbly witty book, until the instructor stopped me with a "Thank you," wrote down a grade in his little book, and then said: "Mr. Smith, will you please continue?" And so it went, for 50 minutes. This was the "grammar-translation method" with a vengeance. Not until my senior year much of my Dutch is based on sheer habit—hundreds of little expressions that I memorized twenty years ago in Holland, that I have used occasionally since then, and that just come out automatically. Of course, I have to "think" when I try to say more complicated things, far more than I have to "think" in English—and I surely make mistakes. But these hundreds of little expressions just come out by themselves—things like "Hoe maakt U het?", "Mooi weer vandaag," "Waar gaat U naar toe?", "Tot de volgende keer." I purposely call these things "habits," because "habit" is supposed to be a dirty word these days. This, at least, is the opinion of many of my colleagues in linguistics who have considered the matter from a theoretical point of view. As one who has actually learned a few languages, I can only say: Habit (like memorization) and role-playing) is not a dirty word in my language learning experience.

But let me return to some further language learning experiences. When I tackled Japanese and Dutch, I was able to use the audiolingual method—though the texts which I used were written before that term had been invented. (They were the so-called "Army language manuals"—Bernard Bloch's for Japanese and Leonard Bloomfield's for Dutch.) In the case of Japanese, I benefited from "individualized instruction": I used to pay a young Japanese-American to come after-hours to my office in the old Munitions Building in Washington. The instruction was a bit unusual, since it was the student who told the teacher what to do rather than vice versa. But it worked, and it worked well.

As for Dutch, I got a Dutch student to record on tape all of the basic sentences and practice conversations in Bloomfield's Dutch manual, and I then learned Dutch by shouting back at the tape recorder. This, too, worked well. Of course, when I got to Holland I found that the Dutch did not always speak basic sentences. Yet it was amazing how much of what they said consisted of bits and pieces of the different basic sentences that I had memorized. Fortunately, Bloomfield's manual had given me practice in just that: combining part of basic sentence 126 with part of basic sentence 247 so as to give a new sentence. And, of course, the manual also contained lots of grammar. So that was another useful thing that I learned: the audiolingual method works, and works well—provided one is not foolish enough to think that it consists only of memorizing basic sentences. (I must add here that, in the summer of 1942, I was a student in an experimental Russian course which did consist solely in the memorization of basic sentences. The results were, predictably, disastrous—and I still know practically no Russian.)

Now, finally, my learning of Swiss German. This was the hardest of all—not because it is hard as such (especially if you already know standard German), but because there are no textbooks for it and because in effect it does not exist in written form. When the Swiss write, they write plain ordinary German. As a result, you cannot read a Swiss German book, and you cannot buy a Swiss German newspaper. The only way you can get at Swiss German (in its many varieties) is from the mouth of a native speaker. I did just that, having a university student come several times a week to our one-room apartment (we were living on a very meager grant that year), getting him to talk, imitating what he said, writing it down in my own transcription, and then having him make tape recordings that I could use for practice. As a result, I learned not the dialect of Zurich but the dialect of that 23rd canton. Still, it amazes the natives. And I learned two further useful things. First, a well-designed instructional manual is of enormous help. This is of course obvious. Second, if understanding and speaking cannot be reinforced by reading and writing, the learning job is just that much harder. If I had been ten years old, I could easily have picked up a fluent Zurich German from my playmates. But I was 45 years old, and the lack of reading materials was a great handicap. (Still another handicap is the fact that Swiss radio programs are nearly always in standard German. The only exceptions are a few programs for the housewife; and even these are always in some dialect different from the one you are trying to learn—for example the dialect of Basel, when you are trying to learn the dialect of Zurich).

In speaking of learning, I need consider only a single learner—myself. But in speaking of teaching, I must consider all sorts of learners, of many different types. Nevertheless, you undoubtedly expect some words of wisdom about language teaching, so here goes. But please take everything I say with a large grain of salt: Remember I'm only one of many "experts" whose opinions have been inflicted upon you.

What should every language teacher know? How should language teachers be trained? It is obvious that they should know as much as possible about the language they are teaching. Less obvious is the fact that they should also know as much as possible about the language of their students—which is to say, in our case, the many varieties of American English. Only in this way can teachers make the kind of "contrastive analysis" mentioned earlier—pinpointing those conflicts between the source language and the target language that can predictably cause trouble, and that always do cause trouble. Regrettably, perhaps, this type of knowledge has often been presented as "linguistics". I don't care what you call it, we've got to know it. If we don't, we will not understand the reasons for many of the mistakes that our students make. And if we understand only that they make these mistakes, and not why they make these mistakes, we will be that much less effective as foreign language teachers. (Contrastive analysis has often been criticized because it did I take a German course in which only German was spoken. Yet the astonishing fact is that I really did learn some German. I later even majored in German—choosing it over French because I did not know it as well and wanted to learn more.

Once started with foreign languages, I just couldn't stop. I took Latin for one year (I had had six years of it in school) ; I took French for two years (and spent a summer in France) ; I took Italian for two years; and I majored in German (and spent a summer in Germany). After graduation I studied for a year in Germany and dabbled in Russian, Swedish, and ancient Greek—learning really only German in the process, but having a great time nonetheless. Back in this country for graduate study, I spent most of my time on things like Gothic, Old Norse, Old English, Old and Middle High German, Sanskrit, Comparative Grammar of Greek and Latin, plus again Swedish—which again did not "take."

During World War II, I supervised Japanese language instruction in six Far East Civil Affairs Training Schools (for future military government officers). I learned enough Japanese at least to keep ahead of the officer-students when I went on inspection trips. Today, because I have not kept it up, my Japanese is all gone. At age 40 I spent a year in Holland and learned Dutch. I am happy to say that this did "take," and that I still speak it very well, thank you. At age 45 I spent a year in Switzerland and learned Swiss German. Switzerland has 22 cantons; I speak the dialect of canton number 23; I speak it with only modest fluency; but at least I speak it well enough to amaze the natives.

Quite seriously, I sometimes wonder whether in this country we should not spend less time on the "big" languages—French, German, Spanish, Russian, Japanese, Chinese—and more time on the "little" languages. For purposes of international understanding and general good will, a modest knowledge of—let us say—French is of little use. A Frenchman expects any civilized human being to know French (how else could he be "civilized"?), just as we expect any civilized human being to know English. With the "little" languages, on the other hand, matters are very different. From my personal experience I know that the Dutch are immensely pleased if one has taken the trouble to learn their language, however imperfectly. And I suspect that the same thing is true with such other "little" languages as Danish, Swedish, Czech, Bulgarian. As for the Swiss, they are amazed and delighted when an American (of all things) can speak any type of Swiss German at all.

The title which I have given to my remarks this evening is, "Confessions of a Language Learner." Let me now turn from "language learning" (a topic about which I think I know something) to "language teaching" (a topic about which no one really knows very much, and about which I surely know no more than you do). During my lifetime, at least four different methods of language teaching have been promulgated as the salvation of mankind: the "grammar-translation method," represented by my own training in German; the "direct method," represented more or less by my own training in French; the "audiolingual method," which came into vogue in the 1950's; and now the "cognitive method," which represents the latest salvation for mankind and is somehow vaguely associated with Noam Chomsky's revolutionary "transformational-generative grammar" in linguistics.

Where does salvation truly lie? For me, personally, any old method seemed to work. My French instruction was well-balanced from the start. It taught me all four of the basic skills: understanding, speaking, reading, and writing. (By "writing" I mean of course only the very simple writing that we expect of our students: more advanced writing requires years of practice, even in our own language; and many of us never achieve it even then.) As I look back on it now, I realize that my French instruction could have been more effective if it had contained a larger dose of what we now call "contrastive analysis"—highlighting the points of contrast between the source language and the target language, and paying special attention to them. So that is one useful thing learned in the meantime: contrastive analysis can be very helpful.

My German instruction was far less well-balanced than this, since it was pretty much limited to grammar and translation. However, I was able to make up for this defect by being active in a German club, and in particular by taking part in a number of German plays. This was a magnificent experience. It is today fashionable to downgrade the value of memorizing and of role-playing. Nonsense! Don't you believe it! Both memorizing and role-playing can be enormously effective. They are ineffective only if they are not accompanied by other tyes of learning, such as grammar and reading. That is a second useful thing that I learned.

Because the audiolingual method is today held in such low esteem by so many people, let me say just a bit more about it. This year, for the second time in my life, I let myself get talked into giving an introductory course in Dutch. As I did so, I realized once again how William Moulton, Princeton '35 and PhD. Yale '41, taught German at Yale and Cornell before returning to his alma mater in 1960 as professor of Linguistics. He was a Fulbright scholar in the Netherlands, '53-'54, an American Council of Learned Societies fellow investigating Swiss dialects, '58-'59, and a Guggenheim fellow in '64-'65. A former language consultant to the War and State departments, Mr. Moulton was the U. S. delegate to the International Congress of Linguistics at Bologna in '72, and was elected president of the Comité International Permanent des Linguistes. This address was presented at the Summer Language Schools Commencement in Mead Chapel on August 13th.

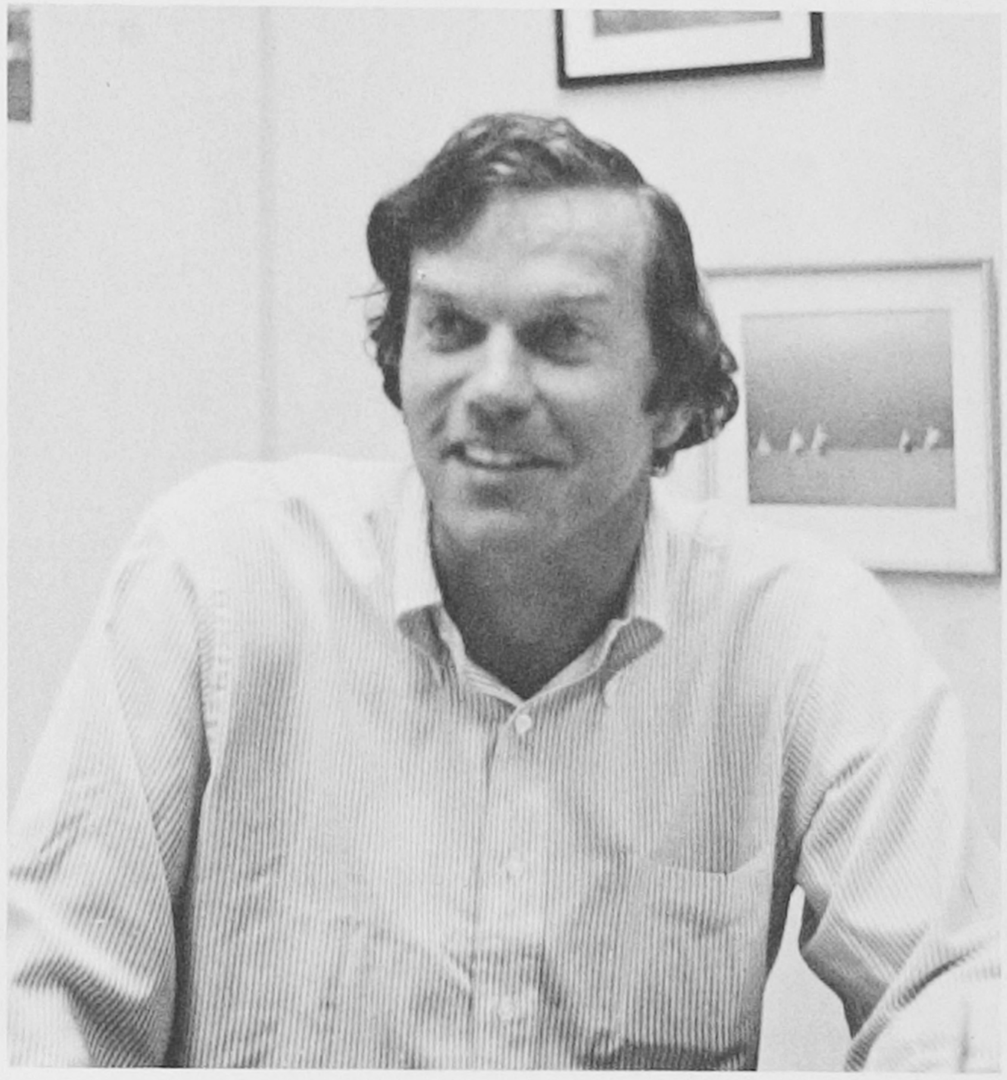
Sailing with a Champion

One of America's 'most versatile sailors', now president of a leading sailboat firm, talks about his 24 years of racing and why the sailing industry, today, has the wind at its back.



Learning recently that Jim Hunt '58 not only owned an outstanding record in sailboat racing but was even the president, now, of a major sailboat company, we looked him up, this summer, at the O'Day Company in Fall River.

We wanted to meet this fellow whose life was sailing and see if his new job as president of a prestigious boat manufactory was as perfect a career as it sounded.

First of all, Jim Hunt impressed his visitor as Central Casting's notion of "yachtsman, sailing (racing)"; tall, broad-shouldered, with innocent blue eyes in an open friendly face, he has the looseness of a sailor or a swimmer. Working tieless and in shirt sleeves, Jim seems to be comfortably at home, whether checking out a problem in the hull moulding or assembly area or running the business from the desk in his spartan office.

Jim's course was set years ago by the fact that America's most successful and versatile naval-architect-and-racing-skipper was his father. Briefly, C. Ray Hunt quite possibly has designed more championship boats—sail and power—than anyone around. His 1938 Concordia design (Java, Malay, Harrier and 95 others) has proved the outstanding cruising-racing boat in the last 25 years of ocean racing; of his 110 Class 24-foot day racer (also 1938; one of the earliest to use marine plywood and the first with a semi-planing hull) more than 600 are registered in the U.S. alone and its larger brother, the 210 class, is represented by another 300 boats. In the mid-'50s and early '60s, Hunt designed three outstanding 5.5 meter racers (Quixotic, Minotaur, and Chaje II), the 12-meter Easterner, the widely esteemed Boston Whaler for Fisher-Pierce, and the deep-V, straked-hull Moppie, the prototype for a range of fiberglass power boats (several thousand have been built) which have monopolized the Miami-to-Nassau race ever since.

As a skipper, Ray Hunt, sailing his own designs, has demonstrated a mastery at the helm to match his designer's skill; in 1955 he took his Concordia-design Harrier to Cowes Week, off England, and with his family as crew won six out of six. (His oldest son, Jim, was 19 at the time).

Jim began crewing for his dad when he was 14 (in a Newport-to-Bermuda race) and, to quote Yachting magazine (August '69), "Jim now ranks as one of the most versatile sailors in the country, with five Bermuda Races, two Annapolis-Newports (including a first), the Fastnet, three SORCs [Southern Ocean Racing Circuit], a six-for-six record at England's Cowes Week in 1955 crewing for his father in Harrier, and two seasons in Easterner in America's Cup trials as some of his major involvements before he went 'one-design'."

In one-design sailing, Jim crewed on the 5.5 meter Minotaur which won an Olympic Gold Medal in 1960, and on the 5.5 meter Chaje II which won the World Championship at Seawanhaka in 1963; as skipper, his Jollyboat Bacalao was runner-up in the North American Championships off Marblehead (with wife Ellen Rockwood Hunt '58 as his crew); he was also second in the U. S. championships for the International Tempest class in 1967; and the following year captured the North American Senior Men's title, winning every race in the eliminations.

Jim left Middlebury at the end of his junior year and after half a year's military service, joined George O'Day Associates as a sales representative for New York and New England. Three years later he was sales manager; in 1971 made vice president; and this past spring became president of O'Day, now a division of Bangor Punta Co.

does not explain all the mistakes our students make. But no one ever claimed that it could explain all these mistakes. It just explains an awful lot of them.)

The second big question is: what teaching method should we use? By now you know my prejudices. I simply do not believe that there is any one teaching method that will solve all our problems (or, indeed, that all our problems will ever be solved). I see virtues in all teaching methods. Call this eclecticism, if you wish; but that has been my experience, both as learner and as teacher. Above all, I would urge you to beware of the latest "fads." Let me explain.

Back in 1942-43, my German-born wife and I wrote what can probably be called the first "audiolingual" introduction to German. This was just one of the "Army language manuals" of those years, all written according to the same general plan, including Bloch's Japanese, Bloomfield's Dutch, Moulton and Moulton's German, and a score of others. Either as teacher, student, or both, I later used the Japanese, Dutch, and German manuals; and I found them highly effective for intensive language courses. (Today, of course, they are hopelessly out of date.) It took about a decade before the methodology of these manuals caught on, and before the term "audiolingual" was invented. When these new ideas did catch on, however, they became a fad and were grossly distorted. I watched in horror as it all happened. There was talk of a "linguistic method" of language teaching—about as silly as speaking of a "botanical method" of growing flowers. Somehow the word got around that the "linguists" had abandoned grammar (can you imagine anything more unlikely than a bunch of linguists abandoning grammar? Linguists love grammar!), and that all our students had to do was to memorize, parrotlike, huge batches of basic sentences. There were of course advantages to the audiolingual method: it placed a new and much-needed emphasis on understanding and speaking. Yet it also led to great disillusionment. Since grammar had been thrown out the window, it was soon found that students who could parrot basic sentences could do nothing else. And when pattern drills were invented, it was also discovered that students could perform them beautifully and yet learn next to nothing in the process.

Eventually, of course, a reaction set in. If I read the Modern Language Journal correctly, the latest fad is the "cognitive method." I am still not quite sure just what it is, yet I am sure that you and I can learn some useful things from it. So let us do so. Let us keep up with the latest ideas, as they are presented in our professional journals and at our professional meetings. If we do not do this, we shall forever remain dull hacks —not with 10, 20, or 30 years of language teaching experience, but with only one year of language teaching experience repeated 10, 20, or 30 times over and over again. At the same time, let us not look at each new idea as the ultimate salvation of mankind. We should be open-minded enough to accept what is good in the new; but we should not be so narrow-minded as to give up each time all that was good in the old. (Perhaps it is not necessary for me to give you this rather trite advice. As I visit language classes in schools and colleges, I find that this is what really good language teachers have been doing all along, anyhow.)

Occasionally even the most enthusiastic language learner gets his comeuppance. I got mine a couple of years ago, and the story can serve as a fitting conclusion to these remarks.

It was at the 11th International Congress of Linguists, in Bologna, in the late summer of 1972. I went there as U.S. delegate, resigned that position, and was promptly rewarded by the honor and headache of being elected president of the international organization of linguists that sponsors these congresses—CIPL, the Comité International Permanent des Linguistes. Our closing session was held not in Bologna but in Florence; and as newly elected president I was of course expected to make the final address, summing up the congress and thanking our Italian hosts.

It was a glorious occasion. There I was in the historic Signoria, facing a thousand congress members from all over the world and flanked on the podium by assorted Italian dignitaries. Because the official languages of the congress are always English and French, I wrote the first third of my address in English and the second third in French; and because we were in Italy, I wrote out the final third in English and had it translated into Italian—which I can at least pronounce, even if I can't write a speech in it. The whole thing was a smashing success. By the time my address was over, I actually had the Italian secretary of the congress and the Italian president of the congress embracing each other on the podium. The whole place was practically dripping with international good will and general good fellowship.

Later, back in Bologna, as I was getting ready to leave, I ran into a fellow member of the Executive Committee, the distinguished Swedish linguist and phonetician, Bertil Malmberg. Some of you may know his work, because he generally writes in French and about French. He complimented me on the brilliance of my closing address. Since I knew that he knew that my Italian is limited to tourist talk, I replied: "Well, thanks—and what did you think of my Italian?" "Not bad," he replied. And then it came: "Frankly, Moulton, it was better than your French."

Ladies and gentlemen, some of you are already language teachers, and some of you are about to become language teachers. To all of you I say: Welcome to a noble and happy profession. I know that you will enjoy it as much as I have. □ lected, we asked the Olympic committee if we could take the other boat if the owner consented and they said, "Take what you think is the fastest boat—naturally we'd like to have the best chance at the Gold Medal." So we ran a bunch of tests afterwards and the boat was just superior at all points of sail. So we arranged with the owner to take it and we went to the Olympics with it and it was a very fast boat and we won the Gold Medal; it wasn't easy—we did have some good competition—but it was a good team we'd built. That was in 1960.

And in 1963, which was really the last time I competed with him, we sailed in the World Championship in the 5.5 meter class at Seawanhaka, New York with some 50 boats from all over the world; we won that just going away.

Q: In the same boat?

J: No, this was another boat, the Chaje II, a later design. In this 5.5 class, the design evolution is very similar to what's happening in the 12-meters (except now the old 12-meter, the Intrepid, seems to be doing pretty well) but it is an evolving design so that the chances of your taking a boat that was designed in, say, '60 and doing well with it in '65 is pretty remote. It's materials, methods of building, sails—not necessarily sail design, but it's just an evolution. This is very true in what we call "big-boat" sailing, today: I mean, to be competitive you really almost have to buy a new boat every two years and you're not talking $30,000, you're talking $200,000, and it's a vicious game! Of course, if people have the money, it's fine.

Now, the Olympics doesn't go with a particular design of boat forever; the 5.5s were in it for, I think, four Olympics, so that would be 16 years. But it hasn't been in the Olympics for the last two times. Well, the Soling class came in; the International Tempest class came in; there have been a lot of changes. One of the criticisms of the 5.5 was, it was an expensive boat. When we were in the Olympics, there were I think, 23 nations represented. That had to be the biggest thrill I've ever had; that's really quite a spectacle they put on; just really well done!

So as I say, the World Championships in '63 was really the last time I sailed with my father and then I started sailing on my own and in '68 I won the North American Senior Men's Championship, which was probably my greatest single feat as a skipper. We competed in International Tempests for what's called the Mallory Cup. The International Tempest is a 21-footer. What they do there is, they break the country down into 8 districts in North America and then you go through quarter-finals, semi-finals and finals—it's a long . . . I must say by the end of that regatta I was a wreck. For the quarter and semi-finals we were very lucky; they were held right over about 20 miles from where I live so I didn't have to go anywhere, and the finals were in San Francisco Bay. In the quarter-finals and semi-finals we won every single race—we just seemed to be going pretty quick that year—and then in the finals we won the first two races and then we broke down; it was very close in the end, it was a good match. In our three-man crew I had my brother and a friend.

That was in '68 and then I did some more sailing in the International Tempest: we went to the Worlds in Sweden in 1970; there were 63 boats there—that was really an incredible regatta! We had just missed the North American Championship in this country by a quarter of a point, and the Olympic Committee was funding six boats to go over to the World's Champion-

On a rainy morning in August we sat in Jim's office and asked him about his racing days:

Jim: My father, Ray Hunt, did a lot of sailboat designing and power-boat designing, so that's what really got me into sailing. I got in a little backwards, in the sense that most people start sailing in a little boat and then graduate to a bigger boat but he being in the business as a naval architect, I sailed with him and only later began sailing on my own. It wasn't really until I was about 23 that I started to sail any kind of a small boat. And I have to say that it was quite a bit of a shock; I can always remember at Marblehead going out for almost my first race on my own and really being kind of scared because here you have a father that was probably one of the finest sailors in the country—he had won the National Junior Championship, I think, three times and then everytime I sailed with him, you know—this was as I say in bigger boats probably 40 feet and up sometimes of his own designs and sometimes not—we would win. I don't know, we'd win certainly a large percentage of the races and then he got involved in designing a 12-meter, Easterner, and not a terribly successful one, but I did sail on that in '59.

Easterner was a beautiful boat and probably a very fast one; it's just that it was a family operation. One of my father's biggest problems was that he would have a tendency to put all of his eggs in one basket and then not necessarily concentrate enough on who was sailing the boat. He would do a good design job but often ended up giving it to the wrong guy. This happened with the Easterner, certainly; it was known as a family boat; it was owned by Chandler Hovey who had all his kids on it. Olin Stephens of Sparkman and Stephens often told my father that when he saw the tank test data on the boat that it was probably a superior boat to the one that he designed that year; but that's kind of typical.

I think the '56 Olympics was a prime example in the 5.5 meters: they had the U.S. trials in Marion, Mass. and he designed a boat called Quixotic which was quite revolutionary, and went out there and just trounced the competition; but in the next-to-the-last race the boat broke down and in the last race all they had to do was beat one boat and the halyard shackle came apart! That year the Olympics were in Australia where it blew like blazes and there isn't any question but that we would have won a Gold Medal. I mean it's just uncanny!

And in 1960 the same thing happened. We were in the Olympic trials (I was then crewing for George O'Day) and we were sailing another boat [Wistful] (not designed by my father); we were fortunate enough to win the U. S. eliminations. These were held at Marblehead in June, and the Olympics were to be in Naples in September. Now my father had again designed another 5.5 meter, Minotaur, which was again quite a revolutionary design from an underbody point of view, and the boat was incredible. It was first at the weather mark in almost every race but the crew work and the skipper work were so bad that it ended up, I guess, fourth in the trials. Well, at the end of the trials, which O'Day's boat had won, we knew the Minotaur was faster—we had watched her all through the U. S. trials but she was badly crewed; so after we were se-

I think sailing is sort of a unique sport in the sense that—it isn't like golf where you go out and bat the ball; you can't blame the ball, you can't blame the club. With sailing you can; I mean a sailor can go out and say, "Well I've got an old boat or the bottom was dirty, or the sails aren't any good or the mast is crooked." You know, you can; I think that's why a lot of people like it, they don't have to look at themselves—what I've always called the mirror test—you know, they don't have to look in there and say, "Gee, it's 100% me." Whereas, you know, in golf or tennis, it is. So in that sense I think sailing has a little bit more appeal than maybe some other sport because not everybody can win and yet they can always have the aspirations of winning; and sailing is also one of the few sports where you, yourself, even though you didn't know how to sail, could go out and sail against the finest in the world! You can't do that with any other sport; you can't do it with golf, you can't go out and play against Gary Player, or any of those guys.

Q: What do you mean, 'You can go out and sail against the finest in the world'?

J: Well, let's say that you own an International Tempest, okay? Or a Soling, which is another Olympic boat, and you want to go for the Olympics. And let's say that you're a mediocre sailor; you can go out and compete in regattas directly against the finest there are! So it's unique in that sense, too, because you know, not anybody can jump into a Formula I and drive it, not everybody can do this, do that . . . so I think that's a lot of the appeal in sailing and racing.

I don't say that racing represents sailing as a whole. Here at O'Day we're not going after the racing market; we think racing probably represents 3, 4% of the market at the most. People are now interested in sailing because of ecology and the energy crisis; here, our sales just took off. And even today, with the economy so bad that you just can't believe it, we've just ended with sales 30%, 35% over last year.

Q: What price range does your line cover?

J: Well, our line starts with a 12-footer which sells for around $1200 and the biggest one we have at the moment is a 27-footer which has a base price of about $10,500, and we're working on a new "32" which may have a base price of $20,000; in all, we have eleven models. What we try to do is cover the whole spectrum and I think, really, have done a very creditable job.

Q: How did you happen to join the company?

J: In 1960 when I crewed with George O'Day in the Olympics was when I first started working for the company. I've really been with the company a long time, 14, 15 years. He started it in, well I think it was probably, 1958, formally. George was a good promoter but not too good a businessman, and they sort of eased him out in '64, I guess. Bangor Punta purchased us in '67, I think it was. You know, they did well as a holding company; Bangor's had some problems . . . They were a conglomerate and, well in the heyday of conglomerates, they were doing well, but lately conglomerates have taken a terrible bath.

Today, the O'Day division has 264 employees, we turn out an average of 65 boats a week, our sales are at $7 million this past year and we expect they'll be up 50% by next year. If that happens, O'Day will then be the largest manufacturer of sailing craft in the world. There are no IBM's or GM's in this business; it's just a lot of small companies. It's easy to start up a boatbuilding company. That's one of the problems, really. All somebody has to do is take a hull—anybody's hull—make a mold from it and he's in business.

Q: But isn't there patent protection on your designs?

J: I only wish there were! As a matter of fact O'Day lost the classic case in hull-design patent law: a former sales manager quit O'Day, bought one of our boats, turned it over and "splashed" it (made a mold from the hull) and even proceeded to promote "his" boat by using O'Day photographs with the O'Day identification air-brushed out! O'Day sued, of course, but lost ships—you know, this is sort of a warm up for the next Olympics. So we went over there and somehow just bombed out on the first two races! We had had a practice race and we won it. And then we went into the first two races and I don't know what happened but we got an 8th and then a 9th. That's not really bombing it in that big a fleet; that's a good-sized fleet. And then we got things together and we were the only American boat to win a race; we won a race and then got a 2nd and then a 4th, I think. The top five places were very close; we ended up 4th overall in the Worlds—all we had to do was to place fourth in one of the other races and we'd have won it all. But we were pleased. This was in Marstrand, Sweden, on the west coast above Göteborg; it's a beautiful place! It's their big sailing resort and we spent a week and a half there. That was in 1970 and then I sailed a couple of times more in the Tempest, after that.

Recently I haven't really done much; in the last year or so, I go out and sail one of our "27s" which is more like a cruising racing boat, but as to mounting another challenge, it's a heck of a lot of work! And having to do, you know, this job now, whew!

Q: When you've got a single-class boat, and you have three men in a crew, and everybody's facing the same wind and sea conditions, what separates the men from the boys, the winners from the losers? How much of it is judgment, how much is sail-handling skill? It can't be equipment, all boats are presumably identical . . .

J: There are two ways to answer that; in the Mallory Cup, which is the North American Senior Men's, that I think is the best test of a skipper and his crew there is, because after each race you change boats. We sailed eight races and we changed boats after every single race so, you know, that is about as good a test as you could have. Now there are some people who do not do well in that competition and yet who are good sailors: they don't seem to have the ability to jump into a boat and put it all together.

If you took eight Tempests, and you went out and took eight skippers and they all sailed the same boat all the time, there isn't any question but that somewhere down the line you'd say that Boat A was better than Boat B or C or D, okay? Well, in the round-robin competition, where they switch after every race, everybody has a "bad" boat or a "good" boat at some time during the series, so that theoretically you should end up with the guy that deserves to win. I personally happen to like that kind of competition and we had tried out for the Mallory's three years in a row and in those three years we advanced to the semi-finals only once, except for 1968 when we went all the way. I think that was the most fun; that had to be the biggest personal thing I've been in.

Q: What percentage of all the factors that contribute to winning is experience, judgment, sailing savvy?

J: Oh, I think a lot of it, I mean it's hard to put a percentage . . . There isn't any question that you have to start with a good boat, with good sails, and a good crew, and then the skipper's ability—I think you could say that probably the skipper's ability and his judgment is worth 30 to 40%; the boat might be worth another 20; the sails another 20; and the crew the balance . . . that type of thing; yeah, there's no question that the skipper's ability and his judgment is the majority, without any question.

the case on some technicality or other. The effect has been that hull designs have no patent protection in the U.S.

My father designed a revolutionary V-hull for power boats and he had a patent on the damn thing and, you know, that patent, if it had held up, I don't know what it would be worth! He'd be a multi-multi-millionaire. He lost it on some little technicality . . . that was a real heart-breaker for him. My father's sort of unique in the sense that he designs for both power and sail. He's not really active now, but we, here, do use his Boston design office exclusively.

Q: Where did you grow up, Jim?

J: Well, originally in Cohasset, Mass. and then moved to Marblehead, and then really down here; I live in South Dartmouth. I've been here for . . . 11 years? We really enjoy the area down here. The business, if it would steady down for a while . . . Last year and the year before, we had over 50% increases. This year counting this plant alone, we'll be about 35, well, maybe 40% ahead. We are now building in Indiana and California through our parent company's companies. In other words, we didn't want to go ahead and have a big building program, so what we are doing is utilizing their facilities because some of those companies were building power boats and when the energy crunch hit, their sales really went down. It's kind of unique; I don't think it's ever been done before, at least in the boating business, and we haven't been at it that long; we had the idea in January and we're into production at both of these plants. There have been some headaches, naturally, but it's timely in one sense, in that the sailboat business is expanding; it's timely in another sense in that transportation costs . . . you know for us to ship a load of boats to the West Coast is ludicrous, because we're shipping, let's say $12,000 worth of boats and it costs us almost $3,000 to get 'em there! The cost of shipping has just gone sky high so now, as long as we can somehow keep selling, I think we have a very unique opportunity because we have an East Coast facility, a Midwest, and a West Coast facility, and it should give us very good flexibility.

It's an interesting gamble and the enthusiasm that we've engendered through them has been most encouraging. They've really been very helpful and the only investment we have is a man, one man at each place, that sort of honchos our coordination. Here at Fall River we expect this plant alone, next year, to do just under $10 million. Some of that is in price increase—you know, you do get volume increases just through price increase, but we are coming in with a new "32" and a new "25" which will add true volume—so we're doing about 10 million here and we still hope to do anywhere from 4 to 6 million out of the other two plants, to give us maybe a combined total of 16 million, which in our industry is huge. The total industry is about $100 million a year. That's in what we call the fiberglass production sailboat.

Yeah, you look at that and it's really small! I mean if you equate it to New York Stock Exchange type of company, it's small potatoes. That's one of the problems, it's somewhat of an unsophisticated industry, but because of the cost of materials and things like that, it's becoming sophisticated, and also because sailing is really coming on, now.

You know, we've kind of pioneered sailing for the mass market in a sense—under 20 feet—in this country. In 1958 we were really the first company to come in with fiberglass sailboats aimed at the mass market, and now because of the energy crisis, because of the interest in sailing, a lot of power boat companies are switching to sailing or they're at least, you know, building some sailboats and it's going to get very competitive. But I think in the long run, that will better the industry; it will make for a better product for the consumer; it'll force the marginal guy out of business, really. Not that we want to force marginal people out of business . . . but we think it could have some very good effects on the industry as a whole.

Meanwhile, in their home overlooking Buzzards Bay in South Dartmouth, 25 minutes away, Jim and Ellen live with three young Hunts—Charles Raymond II, 13, Anne, 11, and Elizabeth, 9. Last summer and this, Jim and Ellen have sailed their O'Day 27, Sundance, in weekend races out of the New Bedford YC, finishing never worse than 4th. This year all three junior Hunts have attended sailing school (in O'Day Widgeons) and "have just been eating it up," Dad reports. A sailing dynasty in the making? If so, it's off to a fast start. □

Philadelphia Gals Raise Grand Gift

The Philadelphia Middlebury Alumnae Club presented the College with a check for $1000 for the 175th Anniversary Fund this spring. Their contribution was raised by sponsoring three performances of "Peter Pan" by the Nicolo Marionettes of New York, in Media, Pa. on March 2nd. Over a thousand children were delighted by the colorful fantasy of Peter and his friends. Janet Brouse Taylor '59 was chairman of the benefit, and other alumnae, their husbands, and children took part in making the affair a success. Barbara Freeman Irving '59 and Irmgard Nierhaus Stebbins '48, chairmen for the 1975 puppet show, have announced that March 1st is the date for the Nicolo presentation of "Beauty and the Beast."

Other activities of the Philadelphia Club this past year were the annual "Blueberry Picnic" at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Huffaker (Caryl Entwistle '52), a coed picnic for freshmen and upperclassmen at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Moore (Martha Johnson '57), and the dinner held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Fay (Ann Heath '54) in September.

Officers for the present year are: President, Juliet Carrington Reed '48; Vice-President and Project Chairman, Barbara Freeman Irving '59; Project Co-chairman, Irmgard Nierhaus Stebbins '48, Secretary and Membership, Arienne Littlewood Delaney '57; Treasurer, Nancy Thomsen Rand '52; and Publicity . . .

Cultchuh, Skiing, Tennis on Boston Alumni's Schedule

Summer in New England—a pleasant memory now that fall and winter are fast approaching, and with them, a full year for the Boston Middlebury Alumni Association.

One function was held during the summer—the annual Freshman Reception, this year at the home of Nancy Faulkner, in Brookline, on August 27. After getting the year off to a good start, we are all hoping for another successful and interesting program for 1974-75.

Our second scheduled event was a Midd-MIT soccer game on October 12 in Cambridge, preceded by a tailgate party. Also planned, for late October, is a daytime tour of one of the many fine museums in the Boston area.

Not only will we be sports watchers (Midd-Lowell basketball, January 18; Midd-Boston State hockey, February 4; Midd-MIT basketball, February 14), we will be participants! Already planned is a Tennis Night in Newton on November 8 and a cross-country ski tour in Concord on February 2.

Again this year we are planning a lecture series of two, or perhaps three, lectures during January and March. Nothing is definite at this time but we hope that our lecturers will be professors from the College—which will surely make for enjoyable evenings. And of course, to end our year, we are holding our Annual Dinner on May 2. I'm sure that after the success of last year's dinner at the New England Aquarium, the Boston alums are looking forward to another good time.

Now that fall is here and the slow pace of summer has picked up, we are ready to get going on all of our planned events. I am looking forward to reporting a year full of success and enjoyment for all the members of the Boston Middlebury Alumni Association.

Publicity Chairman, Boston Middlebury Alumni Assn.

1933 Maurice J. Bertrand, 62, died August 17 in Colchester, Vt. following a short illness. He was a graduate of Boston University Law School and had been an attorney and certified public accountant in the Barre-Montpelier, Vt. area for the past 25 years. Survivors are his wife, the former Monica Lawrence, two daughters, Mrs. Robert Renzoni (Ann), Mrs. Lester Hodgdon (Sidney), and three sons, Michael, Stephen, and Matthew. Maurice was a member of Delta Kappa Epsilon.

1933 Peter R. Sorensen, 63, died May 19. Since his graduation he had been with the New York State Executive Department Division of Parole and at the time of his death was Buffalo area supervisor. In 1948 he married Helen Tobin. Peter was a member of Chi Psi.

1935 Edward F. Palmer, 61, died August 15 in New Haven, Conn. following a brief illness. He attended Middlebury for a year. For the past 41 years he has been the owner of Palmer Brothers Moving and Storage in Ansonia, Conn. Mr. Palmer served two years as a legislator in Connecticut's General Assembly and was an active participant in church and civic affairs. Survivors are his wife, the former Estelle Fedory, and two daughters, Mrs. Russell Barmmer (Marcia) and Mrs. Clifford Hoyle (Judith). Edward was a member of Delta Upsilon.

1936 Dr. Victor Breen, 60, died April 7. Following his graduation from the University of Buffalo Medical School he served as chief surgical officer at Lovell General Hospital during World War II. Since 1946 he had practiced medicine in Dansville, N. Y. In 1939 he married Phyllis Garwood and they had a son, Michael. Dr. Breen was a member of Delta Upsilon.

1942 John Corbin, 54, is listed as missing and presumed drowned in Edgartown, Mass. in June. He had completed a real estate transaction and had a five-hour wait for a return ferry trip and it is assumed that he went for a swim alone while waiting for the ferry because his car, clothing, and brief case were found at the beach. He was a senior partner in the law firm of Corbin, Sarapas, Madaus and Arakelian in Worcester. He is survived by his wife and a daughter, Cynthia. John was a member of Alpha Tau Omega.

1946 Helen Floyd Travers (Mrs. Herbert), 50, died July 13 in Waterford, Conn. She had been a copy editor for The New London Day since returning to New London last April from Leonia, N. J. She had worked for Fairchild Newspapers in NewYork City and did free-lance writing under the name of Helen Keeney Floyd. Survivors are two sons, James and Herbert. Her husband died in 1973.

1948 Robert L. Stevenson died May 22 in Charlestown, N. H. He was a salesman of outdoor advertising with the Stevenson Advertising Agency of Charlestown. Survivors are a son, John, and a daughter, Gail.

1956 Word has just been received of the death of William Fay on November 8, 1967.

1967 Word has been received of the death of Jay A. Jensen.

Former Faculty

V. Spencer Goodreds, Professor of Public Speaking and Drama from 1928 until 1942, died at his home in Greenville, Pa. last October. He was 77. At Middlebury, Prof. Goodreds produced plays in the Old Playhouse (since burned), taught play-production and speech, and coached debate. A native of Chicago, he took his BA at the University of Buffalo and his Masters at Middlebury in 1933. After leaving Middlebury in '42, he taught speech and drama at Thiel College, Greenville, Pa. until his retirement in 1966.

In addition to his many published works on public speaking and college dramatics, Prof. Goodreds was an active promoter of the athletic program at Thiel, coaching baseball for several years.

He is survived by his wife, the former Pansy Nisbet, his son, John Stanton, and two grandchildren.

And now, a word from our President...

"To revive the pleasing recollections of academic life—to cherish a laudable zeal for the advancement of literature and science and particularly the prosperity of our Alma Mater, this association is formed: to unite the graduates and ex students of Middlebury College in dedication to the course of education for themselves and others; to support the President, Trustees and Faculty in the enrichment of the College; and to foster a spirit of fellowship among the members for their mutual enjoyment and welfare." The initial statement in this preamble is from the original Middlebury Alumni Association Constitution of 1824, establishing it as one of the oldest alumni groups in the country. Then in June, 1973, the Report of the Special Committee on the College further expanded in three ways on the purpose of this association by saying, first, "Specifically, we hope that the Director of Alumni Relations will plan events and conferences at the College, both winter and summer, in which alumni will renew their acquaintance with the resident College and share their experience with faculty and students. Second, "We are concerned particularly about the relation of younger alumni to the College, given competing educational loyalties and shifting perceptions of values in an undergraduate college." And last, "We believe that if the alumni are honored for their accomplishments and professional experience, they, in turn, will contribute the valuable gift of their experience and wisdom to Middlebury undergraduates."

It is my desire and hope in the next two years to achieve some progress in attaining these goals as generally set by the above committee. The goals cannot be achieved without your interest in and support of them. Therefore, please take note of the following list of members of the Alumni Council. As of the Council's meeting on October 5, each is charged with the responsibility to be informed of what is going on at Middlebury in his or her particular areas. Please talk with us whenever you have a chance. Our prime goal is to maintain an open avenue of communication between the College and the alumni. Will you help, too?

MIDDLEBURY COLLEGE

HONOR ROLL OF DONORS

It's a bit ironic that in one of Middlebury's stronger years for total gift support, the College was forced into a small deficit situation because Annual Giving missed the goal by $39,000. Although gifts totaled over $2,250,000, the fact that Annual Giving could earn no more than $311,000 toward its goal of $350,000 caused the red ink.

Total alumni giving was at a near-record level but alumni giving to the Annual Fund was off by $11,000 from a year ago. Although parents' gifts to the College for all purposes remained incredibly strong, gifts to the Parents Fund for Annual Giving were off by $3,500.

If we are to meet our '74-'75 goal of $350,000, our alumni must be determined to support their College substantially and annually. The General Campaign of the 175th Anniversary Fund has demonstrated that Middlebury alumni will rally for a special cause. Now we must convince ourselves that maintaining Middlebury's ongoing commitment to excellence is an annual "special" cause.

In the sections which follow, please note the performance of the Class of '24. We should let their record serve as our inspiration for '74-'75. They went after larger gifts for their College, and got them!

12

Marguerite Ellison, who has lived in Somerville, Mass. for 34 years is now happily settled in a Home for the Retired owned and operated by the First Congregational Church of Melrose, Mass. She is near enough Somerville to keep many of her interests there. Her new address is 200 W. Foster St., Melrose 02176.

22

Alice Ladd Dillenbeck and her husband, Harold, came up from Tennessee to celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary in Johnstown, N. Y., where they had spent most of their married life. Alice and Harold and all out-of-town friends stayed at the Holiday Inn for the weekend. Guests included their two sons and families, also a mini-Middlebury reunion made up of her classmates, Ruth Aldrich '21, Lila '22 and Ken Doe '25, Edith Cowles Emerson '21 and Doris Pinney Russell '21 and husband, Charles. The week-end was spent in visiting and reminiscing and even included singing of "Gamaliel Painter's Cane." Marion (Benny) Tilden Mitchell has recently moved to 7 Baird St., Montpelier, Vt. 05602. Elsie Scott celebrated her birthday with a summer colony cook-out which included as guests, Rev. and Mrs. L. D. Chase '37 and '38, brother of Priscilla Chase '23, her 1930 European companion. Elsie continues to cultivate a large vegetable garden, some of which gets into cans for sister, Beulah '23, and others. Elsie's address is Pentacost Rd., Northfield, Mass. 01360. Babe and Margaret Wade altered their usual route from their residence in Arizona to their summer home in Grand Isle, Vt., driving north along the coast to Vancouver, then across British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan. They report a beautiful and exciting trip with the Canadian Rockies as a feature. In addition to his duties as chairman of fund raising for Midd in Worcester, Mass. area, Hadley Spear is chairman of this year's Cancer Crusade in the city of Worcester. No one can better dispute the impression that retirement means an inactive and idle existence than Gerald Cabot, former cashier of the National Bank of Windsor, Vt. Here are some of Bunny's present responsibilities: director, Windsor Federal Savings and Loan; trustee, Windsor Library Association; executive committee, Historical Windsor, Inc.; trustee, Windsor Library Association; member for 40 years of the Windsor Rotary Club; trustee, Windsor Cemetery Association; and registered representative, Fairbanks and Co., Boston, stocks, bonds and mutual funds. No wonder Bunny has been known affectionately by his townspeople for many years as the unofficial mayor of Windsor.

23

Alice Littlefield Grose (Mrs. Arthur) was a member of the Middlebury Charter trip to Majorca. Rowland and Florence Clarke Shepardson celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary in June. Their two daughters gave a big party for them with many friends and relatives present.

The Unmaking of a President

A Study in the Preservation of our Political Institutions

By Murray Dry, Assistant Professor of Political Science, Middlebury College

I. The Problem

Can a successfully established republican government continue to provide constructive fields of action for its capable and ambitious citizens? Long before his own deeds of preservation won for him a fame rivaling that of our founding fathers, Abraham Lincoln reflected on this problem.[1] The more successful the founding, he argued, the more prosaic is the task of maintaining republican government. Peace and prosperity permit citizens to distinguish between their country's and their own concerns, and to focus on the latter. During times of national crisis the people's strongest passions are directed against the external enemy; outstanding men risk great dangers for the sake of fame. "If they succeeded, they were to be immortalized; their names were to be transferred to counties and cities, and rivers and mountains."[2] But in ordinary times the people are prone to violate the law when it conflicts with their desires and interests. As for outstanding men, will they be satisfied, Lincoln asks, "aspir[ing] to nothing beyond a seat in Congress, a gubernatorial or a presidential chair?" His answer: "What! think you these places would satisfy an Alexander, a Caesar, or a Napoleon? Never! Towering genius disdains a beaten path!"[3] Lincoln proposed that the people be united, attached to the government and laws, and made intelligent to successfully frustrate the tyrant's designs.

The Nixon Presidency did not constitute the extreme danger to our republic that Lincoln considered. Nonetheless, an alert and jealous Congress and an independent judiciary, supported by a vigorous press and an eventually aroused citizenry, did act to check audacious and unwarranted assertions of presidential prerogative. The constitutional crisis known as "Watergate" reached its climax during the week of 5-9 August 1974, when Richard Nixon became the first American President to resign from office and Gerald Ford, the first Vice-President chosen by Congress under the Twenty-Fifth Amendment, became President. This resignation terminated an impeachment inquiry in which the House Judiciary Committee had voted articles of impeachment for obstruction of justice in the Watergate cover-up, misuse of executive power, and contempt of Congress. The immediate cause of the resignation was the President's non-voluntary release of transcripts of tape-recorded conversations showing that he knew about and authorized the Watergate cover-up as early as June 23, 1972, five days after the break-in. In a separate statement Nixon acknowledged that the conversations were "at variance with certain of my previous statements."[3a] More precisely, he had been lying about his knowledge of and participation in a serious criminal offense for two years. This revelation was the "smoking pistol" that assured his removal from office for high crimes and misdemeanors.

Even though the President resigned, a review of the impeachment evidence available to the public and the House Judiciary Committee is important for several reasons. First, the "White House Transcripts," by themselves, provide insight into the character of the former President and his men. We learn that no government of laws can rely exclusively on institutional checks and balances in the place of moderate and just men. Second, proposals for modification of our constitutional system toward parliamentary government have reappeared since Watergate. To assess these proposals we must understand how our institutions operate to restrain executive power at the same time they produce a government which, while rooted in consent of the governed, acts to secure individual rights and to protect our permanent interests. My emphasis will be on the lawmaking branch, since our republic vests primary responsibility for control of the President in Congress. The location of the impeachment power, the definition of an impeachable offense, and the non-criminal punishment for conviction attest to this. Congress was responsible for John Dean's testimony, which first implicated President Nixon, for the discovery of the White House tapes and subsequent publication of the transcripts, for the establishment of an

D: He's a strange man, Mr. President.
P: Strange or strong?
D: Strange and strong. His loyalty is—I think it is just beyond the pale. Nothing—
P: He hates the other side, too, doesn't he? (italics added)
D: Oh absolutely, he is strong, he really is.[9]

The enemies were the Democrats, but Mr. Nixon favored the way Harry Truman stuck by his subordinates, even in the celebrated Hiss case where Nixon was on the other side, to the way Eisenhower treated Nixon and Sherman Adams, demanding that everyone be "clean as a hound's tooth."[10]

According to Dean, Watergate started with a directive to him from Haldeman to develop an intelligence operation at the Committee to Reelect the President (CRP). (Jeb Magruder's account, given to the President by Ehrlichman on April 14, 1973, places this in September 1971.[11]) Dean first recommended Jack Caulfield for the job; when he was rejected, Dean suggested Gordon Liddy, who had already successfully broken into the office of Dr. Fielding, Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist. Apparently one daring and illegal success caused Dean, and then Mitchell, to press their luck. However, Ehrlichman had initialed his approval for the Hunt-Liddy operation in Dr. Fielding's office; if anything went wrong in the next venture, Ehrlichman, and hence the White House, could be blackmailed.

Magruder, the deputy director of CRP, asked Dean to hear Liddy's presentation. The million-dollar plan included codes, black bag (i.e., cash-carrying) operations, kidnappings, and prostitutes.[12] Mitchell "just sat there puffing and laughing."[13] Liddy was told to come back with something realistic. The second plan also involved bugging and kidnapping and the price was $500,000. "To get Mitchell off the hook," Dean objected to such a discussion going on in the Attorney General's office. Dean explained that Mitchell "is a nice person and doesn't like to have to say no when he is talking with people he is going to have to work with."[14] Translated, Mitchell combined moral obtuseness with a fear of being disliked. Dean broke up the meeting, and went back to Haldeman saying: "The White House has got to stay out of this and I, frankly, am not going to be involved in it."[15] Haldeman said: "I agree, John."

Dean may have thought that that finished the matter, but he did not insist on it and he did not report the proposal to the President. Haldeman did not say he would order the intelligence operation terminated; he simply agreed that the White House should not be involved. Neither Dean nor Haldeman knew the details of the actual operation in advance—nor did they want to. They did know that illegal activities had been proposed to members of the White House staff, to the CRP, and to the Attorney General, and that these proposals had not been categorically rejected.

Dean tells Nixon what he surmises occurred from here on. With Hunt's assistance, Liddy came up with a third plan, and to get it approved they sought the assistance of Colson, a friend of Hunt's. Colson called Magruder: "You all either fish or cut bait. This is absurd to have these guys over there and not using [sic] them."[16] The President interrupts to ask if Colson knew what they were talking about and Dean says he probably had "a damn good idea." After asking about witnesses to the conversation and finding out that there were two—Hunt and Liddy—the President says: "Then you have a problem—I was saying, as to the criminal liability in the White House."[17] Magruder's account adds that he and Mitchell "were nervous about [the plan] and didn't feel comfortable about it," but he still concluded: "Well, all right, I'll start this moving." A copy of an itemized budget, now $250,000, was submitted to Gordon Strachan, Haldeman's assistant. There was no explicit approval from Strachan, but Magruder says: "I read his non-response as OK from higher-up [e.g., Haldeman]. I am not able to say of my own knowledge that there was any knowledge of anyone higher-up." The plans included bugs at three places: Watergate, McGovern headquarters, and the Fontainebleu. Magruder concludes: "In all honesty, this was a kind of non-decision. Nobody felt comfortable in this thing, but we were bulldozed into it."[18]

The precarious movement-by-indecision progressed further when Haldeman, Strachan, and Mitchell received the results of the first bugging. Dean tells the President that Strachan knew where the information was coming from but he did not know if Haldeman did. ("I have never come to press these people because it hurts them to give up that next inch, so I had to piece things together."[19]) The President's men were divided into factions, which limited communication and weakened control of the operation. No one gave the President a full report. Haldeman may not have known where the information came from but he ordered the capabilities shifted from Muskie to McGovern.

From his post-June-17 conversation with Liddy, Dean surmised that Strachan anticipated Haldeman's desire for better information and then pressured Magruder, who pressured Liddy. About this chain of command, where everyone must guess what the other person wants done, Dean says: "I have seen that happen on other occasions where things have [been] said to have been of very prime importance when they really weren't."[20] Magruder reports that Liddy also got pressure from Mitchell, who was displeased with the poor results of the first break-in. "Mr. Mitchell, I'll take care of it," Liddy responded.[21] According to independent Special Prosecutor, and finally, for the extensive impeachment inquiry. The House Judiciary Committee gathered voluminous evidence, deliberated, and decided on the momentous issues in a manner reminiscent of Edmund Burke's counsel:

> Certainly, gentlemen, it ought to be the happiness and glory of a representative to live in the strictest union, the closest correspondence, and the most unreserved communication with his constituents. Their wishes ought to have great weight with him; their opinion high respect; their business unremitted attention. It is his duty to sacrifice his repose, his pleasures, his satisfactions, to theirs; and above all, ever, and in all cases, to prefer their interest to his own. But his unbiased opinion, his mature judgment, his enlightened conscience, he ought not to sacrifice to you, to any man, or to any set of men living. These he does not derive from your pleasure; no, nor from the law and the constitution. They are a trust from Providence, for the abuse of which he is deeply answerable. Your representative owes you, not his industry only, but his judgment; and he betrays instead of serving you, if he sacrifices it to your opinion.[4]

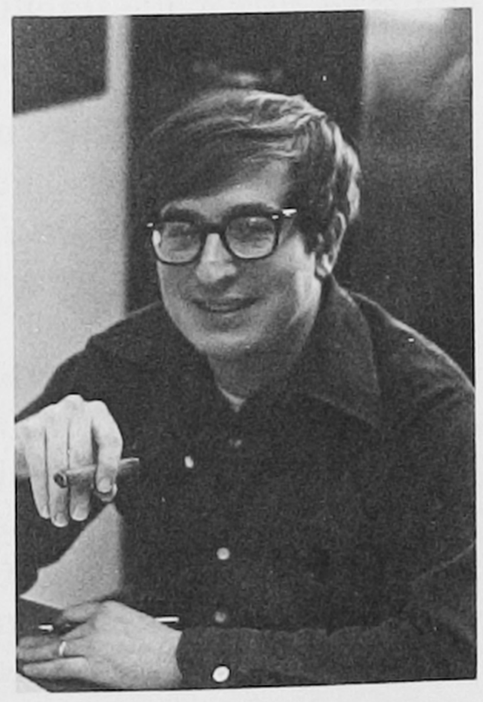
Finally, our duty as citizens necessitates an independent assessment of the evidence upon which the House Judiciary Committee voted to impeach Richard Nixon for high crimes and misdemeanors. A forced presidential resignation must be justified by the evidence to confirm our separation of powers. Otherwise the removal was either a fortunate accident or a sign of partisan politics. The publication of the June 23 transcripts, along with the President's admission, last August 5, was not ordered by the Supreme Court. Without those transcripts, which could have been erased or withheld from Congress and the public, the country would now be in the midst of an impeachment trial. The trial's major issue would have concerned the payment of hush money to the Watergate defendants.[5] Conviction required 67 Senate votes, and eleven members of the Judiciary Committee failed to find clear and convincing proof of presidential guilt. Richard Nixon has not acknowledged any guilt, either in his resignation speech or in his acceptance of President Ford's full and unconditional pardon for any crimes he might have committed while in office. The controversy over the timing and the issuing of the pardon sheds no light on the main constitutional issue, which is the effectiveness of the impeachment power. If anything the pardon means that American citizens cannot "let George do it." We can either rest on the unexamined conviction that any time Congress and/or the courts strike a blow against the Presidency it is a victory for freedom; or we can attempt to duplicate the Judiciary Committee's task and come to an independent judgment of their decision. This latter position seems consistent with Lincoln's advice, for an uninformed people, even with a prejudice against presidents, will not maintain republican government for long.

II. Interpreting the Evidence: An Assessment of the Men and Their Deeds

On March 21, 1973, John Dean tells the President how the break-in originated, how his key advisers were immediately drawn into the cover-up, and what Dean himself did to contain the matter. He brings the President up to date so he can decide how to treat Howard Hunt's immediate demand for $120,000 for personal expenses and legal fees. Hunt threatened to talk—thereby implicating John Ehrlichman, Charles Colson, Jeb Magruder, and John Mitchell—if he did not receive the money before his sentencing. Two courses of action still remained open to the President: he could have turned off the tape recorder and edited or erased his previous tapes; or he could have reported Dean's entire story to the Attorney General's office.

The President's failure to take the first alternative is puzzling. One observer suggested that by turning off the tapes, Nixon would have confessed that he was "not really enlisted in the cause of righteousness but merely in his own aggrandizement of power."[6] That means that Nixon was not ruthless enough to succeed in his wrongdoing. This interpretation is supported by his failure to take the second alternative and divest himself of responsibility for his friends' criminal deeds. But Nixon and his associates viewed justice as doing good to friends and harm to enemies. For example, Dean considered the opportunity to use the FBI and the IRS to harass political enemies "an exciting prospect."[7] Colson is described by Nixon as capable of doing anything,[8] and the following conversation took place between Nixon and Dean about Gordon Liddy:

> P: How the hell does Liddy stand up so well?



Murray Dry, Assistant Professor of Political Science, joined Middlebury's faculty in 1968, and received his PhD from the University of Chicago in 1970. He teaches courses in American Constitutional law, political philosophy, and American government. He has published an article on "Separation of Powers and Representative Government." in the Political Science Reviewer for 1973, and is working on an article on Congress for a book entitled, Founding Principles of American Government: Two hundred Years of Democracy on Trial. He is married to Cecelia Cohen '72.

would come out anyway and "in effect look like a cover-up."[34] Dean returns to a proposal to call a new Grand Jury "so that they can really have investigated the White House on this."[35] This is the last reference to a new Grand Jury. In his brief to the House Judiciary Committee, James St. Clair argued:

> Not once, from the time it was first suggested that the new Grand Jury proceedings could permit delay of sentencing and thereby make consideration of Hunt's demand no longer urgent, was there any suggestion that Hunt's demand be met.[36]

This is a dubious defense against a charge of obstruction of justice, because Dean suggests that everyone take the Fifth Amendment before the Grand Jury and the President says everyone can say he does not remember.[37] Furthermore, St. Clair was in error because the following conversation takes place immediately afterward:

D: They're going to stonewall it, as it now stands. Excepting Hunt. That's why his [he's a] threat.
H[aldeman]: It's Hunt's opportunity.
P: That's why for your immediate things you have no choice but to come up with the $120,000 or whatever it is. Right?
D: That's right.
P: Would you agree that that's the prime thing that you damn well better get that done?
D: Obviously he ought to be given some signal anyway.
P: Well for Christ's sakes get it . . .[38]

This is the last reference to the immediate payment to Hunt. St. Clair argued that the "it" referred only to a signal and not to money. He never explained what kind of a signal he thought it was, if not a signal that Hunt's demands would be met.

The conversation then returns to the Grand Jury:

P: Seems we're going around the track. You have no choice on Hunt but to try to keep—
D: Right now, we have no choice.
P: But my point is, do you ever have any choice on Hunt? That is the point. No matter what we do here now, John, whatever he wants if he doesn't get it—immunity, etc., he is going to blow the whistle.
D: What I have been trying to conceive of is how we could lay out everything we know before a Grand Jury or somebody else so that if a Hunt blows, so what's new? It's already been told to a Grand Jury and they found no criminal liability and they investigated it in full.[39]

St. Clair, who would have us believe that the President's concern about Hunt was based on national security—in connection with Ellsberg—interprets this last discussion as nullifying the decision to pay Hunt. But how does he explain the $75,000 payment made to Hunt that evening?

There is general agreement on the sequence of events leading to the payment. Meeting with Dean, Haldeman, and Ehrlichman later on March 21, Nixon asks again about Hunt and his financial situation:

P: What do we do about that?
D: Well apparently Mitchell and LaRue are now aware of it so they know how he is feeling.
P: True. Are they going to do something?
D: Well, I have not talked with either of them. Their positions are sympathetic.
P: Well, it's a long road isn't it? When you look back on it, as John has pointed out here, it really has been a long road for all of you, of us.
H: It sure is.

Dean relates the conclusion of the Hunt affair to the President on April 16. After consulting with Haldeman, he went to Mitchell and communicated Hunt's demands.

D: And then we were meeting down here a few days later in Bob's office with Bob, and Ehrlichman, and Mitchell and myself, and Ehrlichman said at that time, "Well, is that problem with Hunt straightened out?" He said it to me and I said, "Well, ask the man who may know, Mitchell." Mitchell said, "I think that problem is solved."
P: That's all?
D: That's all he said.
P: In other words, that was done at the Mitchell level?
D: That's right.[40]

St. Clair's interpretation of the payment rules out presidential authorization on the basis of the above-quoted conversation: "It is inconceivable that the President would be asking for such advice if he had authorized the payment several hours earlier. Any indication, therefore, . . . that the President authorized any action with respect to payments for Hunt is in conflict with the evidence."[41]

But the evidence of the entire conspiracy, as we have followed it in these conversations, does not support St. Clair's interpretation. Rather, it reveals a President incapable of taking charge of the situation and choosing a definitive course of action. The payment to Hunt is made on the President's authority, even if he appears to acquiese in the action of his subordinates. He knew about it, approved of it, and repeatedly ordered it. Although his later inquiry indicates indecisiveness, that does not relieve him of constitutional responsibility.

In light of the revelations on the June 23 tapes and the subsequent reactions of Mr. St. Clair and the eleven members of the Judiciary Committee who voted against the first article of impeachment, we may conclude that counsel felt it his duty is make the best possible case as long as he could conscientiously make it, and the congressmen bent over backward to give Magruder neither he nor Mitchell knew of plans for a second break-in. But what did they expect? On the other hand, Dean reports that Magruder gave instructions to go back into the DNC.[22] In either case, Dean, Mitchell, and Haldeman gave tacit approval to the operation, chose not to know what was being done under their authority, lost control, and suffered the consequences—blackmail.

After the Watergate burglars were caught, Liddy asked Mitchell for attorneys' fees and Herb Kalmbach was ordered to raise and distribute the cash. Dean, Haldeman, and Ehrlichman were also involved in these early payments which, as Dean said to the President on March 21, were "an obstruction of justice."[23] It is not clear that anyone gave much thought to the first money payment, nor is there any indication, so far, that anyone consulted the President. Certainly no one expected the payments to be exposed and even as late as September 15, 1972, the President and Dean were confident. The decision to use the CIA as a cover to limit the FBI's investigation was working; Dean was getting information from Patrick Gray about the FBI's progress and from Assistant Attorney General Henry Peterson about the Grand Jury and the Justice Department's investigations. Everything seemed contained. Then Hunt demanded more money, Colson raised Hunt's hopes about clemency, and the White House conspirators were "back in the danger area again."

Dean suggests to Mr. Nixon that Haldeman, Ehrlichman, Mitchell, and Dean sit down and figure out "how this thing can be carved away from you so it does not damage you or the presidency."[24] The President should tell the Attorney General he now knows the whole story. Dean, who was prepared to go to jail, is the only person to make such a suggestion, which reveals insight and loyalty. Nixon cannot act on it, however. He considers a policy of limited disclosure and no more blackmail, but if anyone talks "then the thing . . . blows cutting Bob and the rest [Dean, Mitchell, and Ehrlichman] to pieces. You would never recover from that, John." Dean agrees and the President decides to fight it out.[25] The decision is for containment—either because the President cannot recognize the seriousness of his own situation or because he identifies too closely with his friends and their activities.

Dean explains that in addition to the $120,000, the defendants will need money throughout their jail terms. It is difficult business, getting clean money, etc., "because we are not criminals and not used to dealing in that business." Nixon asks how much money is needed and Dean answers a million dollars over two years.

P: We could get that. On the money, if you need the money you could get that. You could get a million dollars. You could get it in cash. I know where it could be gotten. It is not easy, but it could be done. But the question is who the hell would handle it? Any ideas on that?[26]

Dean suggests Mitchell, who has had Fred LaRue working on money problems. Nixon asks if the Cuban Committee is being used as cover, or whether that would be obstruction of justice. Later he will claim to have been joking about this but it seems that he was serious then, just as he was later when he discussed money payments with Kleindienst, who explained to Nixon that paying money to defendants for their silence was indeed obstruction of justice.[27]

The conversation returns to Hunt who "knows so much he could sink Chuck Colson."

P: Just looking at the immediate problem, don't you think you have to handle Hunt's financial situation damn soon?
D: I think that is—I talked with Mitchell about that last night and—
P: It seems to me we have to keep the cap on the bottle that much or we don't have any options.
D: That's right.
P: Either that or it blows right now.[28]

After discussing Dean's proposal to cut losses and let some people go to jail, Nixon returns to the million dollars, asking if Dean could hold things with it. This leads to a discussion of clemency.

D: I am not sure you will ever be able to deliver on the clemency. It may be just too hot.
P: You can't do it politically until after the '74 elections, that's for sure. Your point is that even then you couldn't do it.
D: That's right. It may further involve you in a way you should not be involved in this.
P: No—it is wrong, that's for sure.[29]

Clemency is definitely ruled out, although Dean later refers to the possibility of parole, since Kleindienst has control of the Parole Board.[30] As a result, the status of the million dollar payment is left uncertain. The President claimed later that the money was necessarily linked to clemency and hence, rejection of one implied rejection of the other.[31] After rejecting clemency, however, he returns to the immediate payment of $120,000, agreeing with Dean that it is worth buying time with it.[32] Soon afterward, Haldeman enters and Nixon refers again to "the Hunt problem that ought to be handled now." He notes that the seriousness of the Hunt problem is due to Ehrlichman and the Ellsberg break-in. At this point, apparently for the first time, Dean suggests using national security as the basis for the break-in of Dr. Fielding's office. Dean and the President then work through an explanation of why they did not use the CIA or the FBI: "P—Because we had to do it on a confidential basis."[33]

The President discusses the money demands further, inclining against the million dollars, since the story

Two constitutional issues arising out of Watergate and related to impeachment are the regulation of executive privilege and the status of a Special Prosecutor. In United States v. Nixon, the Supreme Court unanimously laid down the following guidelines for claims of executive privilege:

> We conclude that when the ground for asserting privilege as to subpoenaed materials sought for use in a criminal trial is based only on the generalized interest in confidentiality, it cannot prevail over the fundamental demands of due process of law in the fair administration of criminal justice. The generalized assertion of privilege must yield to the demonstrated, specific need for evidence in a pending criminal trial.[44]

The Court reaffirmed the rule of law in a clear and decisive manner, but it also scrupulously avoided any reference to Congress's power to subpoena the President for information relative to an impeachment inquiry. While the constitutional holding in the case related to the criminal trial of Mr. Nixon's former advisors, it was no secret that the subpoenaed tapes might yield information relevant to the President's impeachment. The Judiciary Committee, anticipating no judicial assistance in getting the President to comply with their subpoenas, voted, 21-17, an impeachment article for his failing to "produce papers and things as directed by duly authorized subpoenas. . . ."[45] Several members who supported impeachment thought this was too drastic an action. Yet if the House is not prepared to impeach a President for withholding evidence in an impeachment inquiry, the power of impeachment loses its efficacy. The House could cite the President for contempt and then direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to arrest and hold him until he complied. But since that alternative appears unseemly, perhaps the courts must be prepared to order a President to comply with a Congressional subpoena in conjunction with a genuine impeachment inquiry. Congress needs the legal and moral support that this judicial cooperation would provide to keep the impeachment threat credible.

On the other hand, Congress, with popular support and the threat of impeachment, was able to force the President to agree to the establishment of a Special Prosecutor for Watergate without judicial assistance. District Court Judge Gerhard Gesell did later rule that the firing of Archibald Cox was illegal, but the decision was unnecessary and the reasoning dubious. Regarding the former point, Mr. Nixon paid a heavy political price for firing Cox after the Court of Appeals upheld Judge Sirica's order for the President to turn over the tapes of selected conversations. It cost him his two top men in the Justice Department, and Congress's threat of impeachment forced him to turn over the tapes and permit the appointment of a new Special Prosecutor. Judge Gesell's reasoning was dubious because ever since Madison persuaded his fellow members of the First Congress that the President had to possess the power to remove executive officers in order to be held accountable for administration, presidential control of executive officers has been acknowledged. To sustain his ruling, Judge Gesell must demonstrate that the function of prosecution is not inherently executive. He did not even try.

This form of judicial restriction on the Chief Executive's control of administration could have harmful effects in other circumstances. Discretion is involved in deciding when to prosecute, when not to prosecute, and when to plea-bargain. Responsibility for the discretionary acts must rest with the President, since he is responsible to Congress and the people. The Supreme Court apparently agrees. Affirming its right to settle the intra-branch dispute in the Nixon case, the Court said: "It is theoretically possible for the Attorney General to amend or revoke the regulation defining the Special Prosecutor's authority. But he has not done so."[46] While this was not part of the holding on the case, the Court clearly took issue with Gesell's opinion that the Cox firing was illegal because the Attorney General could not amend the regulation establishing the Special Prosecutor's office.

The Watergate affair, which culminated in presidential impeachment by resignation, reveals the limits of reliance on separation of powers to maintain republican government. We can restrain misdirected ambition more easily than we can select good governors in the first place. Our Constitution encourages enlightened self-interest; it connects the interest of the man with the rights of the office. This normally succeeds in elevating the objectives, and hence the character, of men in high office. Richard Nixon, who was more comfortable and more successful dealing with powerful and hostile foreign rulers than with his fellow citizens, is our most notable exception. Apparently we cannot dispense with the task of cultivating moral virtue in our prospective governors.

When American government was less egalitarian and less national, Congress was able to compete with the Presidency for political leadership. Today our national legislature is better suited to reflect our diverse interests and to restrain executive power when necessary. Critics of the modern Presidency note the monarchical character of the office but they don't appreciate the need for energy in the executive for an effective administration of government. Nor do they respect the preferences of many citizens, who identify with the President more than with Congress.

Jefferson once described the Whig and Tory parties as reflecting two human natures: "The sickly, weakly, timid man, fears the people, and is a tory by nature.

the President the benefit of the doubt. The long sought "smoking pistol" was difficult to discover not only because certain tapes were missing or withheld from the Committee: the very ineptness of the conspiracy and the President's lack of control over his subordinates made it difficult to find "clear and convincing proof" of high crimes and misdemeanors. While the June 23 transcripts confirm the majority's decision and throw open other questions concerning what Nixon knew and did, the evidence on the hush money, available to the Committee and the public, sustains the decision to impeach.

III. The Separation of Powers, Ambition, and Republican Government

America's major constitutional crises, such as the Civil War, the Depression, and the Second World War, necessitated the energetic exercise of exceptional powers, or prerogatives, and thus resulted in the expansion of presidential power. This expansion of presidential power was justified by its positive political achievements. As a result, the exceptional preservers of our republic, Lincoln and Roosevelt, won a fame equal to that of our original founders. Watergate is different. The crisis resulted from foolish and dangerous assertions of executive power. The resolution came from Congress and the courts, the branches associated with the rule of law. The congressional and judicial achievements were collective and consisted in the negative act of restraining presidential power. Hence congressmen and judges are not likely to gain the fame of a Lincoln or a Roosevelt. But the success of popular government depends on our recognizing and rewarding the moderate achievements of numerous magistrates. Congress moved with the deliberate speed of its large and diverse national constituency. The Judiciary Committee's thoroughness and fairness testify to the strength of Congress and its committee system of division of labor. And the entire Congress was fully prepared to exercise its awesome constitutional duty.

Those citizens who are impatient with the slow process of constructing a majority in Congress, unhappy with an appointed President and Vice-President, especially now that this President exercised his constitutional power to pardon the man who appointed him Vice-President, warmly advocate changing our constitutional separation of powers into parliamentary government. We might reply with Burke, that while reformers > are possessed by these notions, it is vain to talk to them of the practice of their ancestors, the fundamental laws of their country, the fixed form of a constitution, whose merits are confirmed by the solid test of long experience, and an increasing public strength and national prosperity.[42]

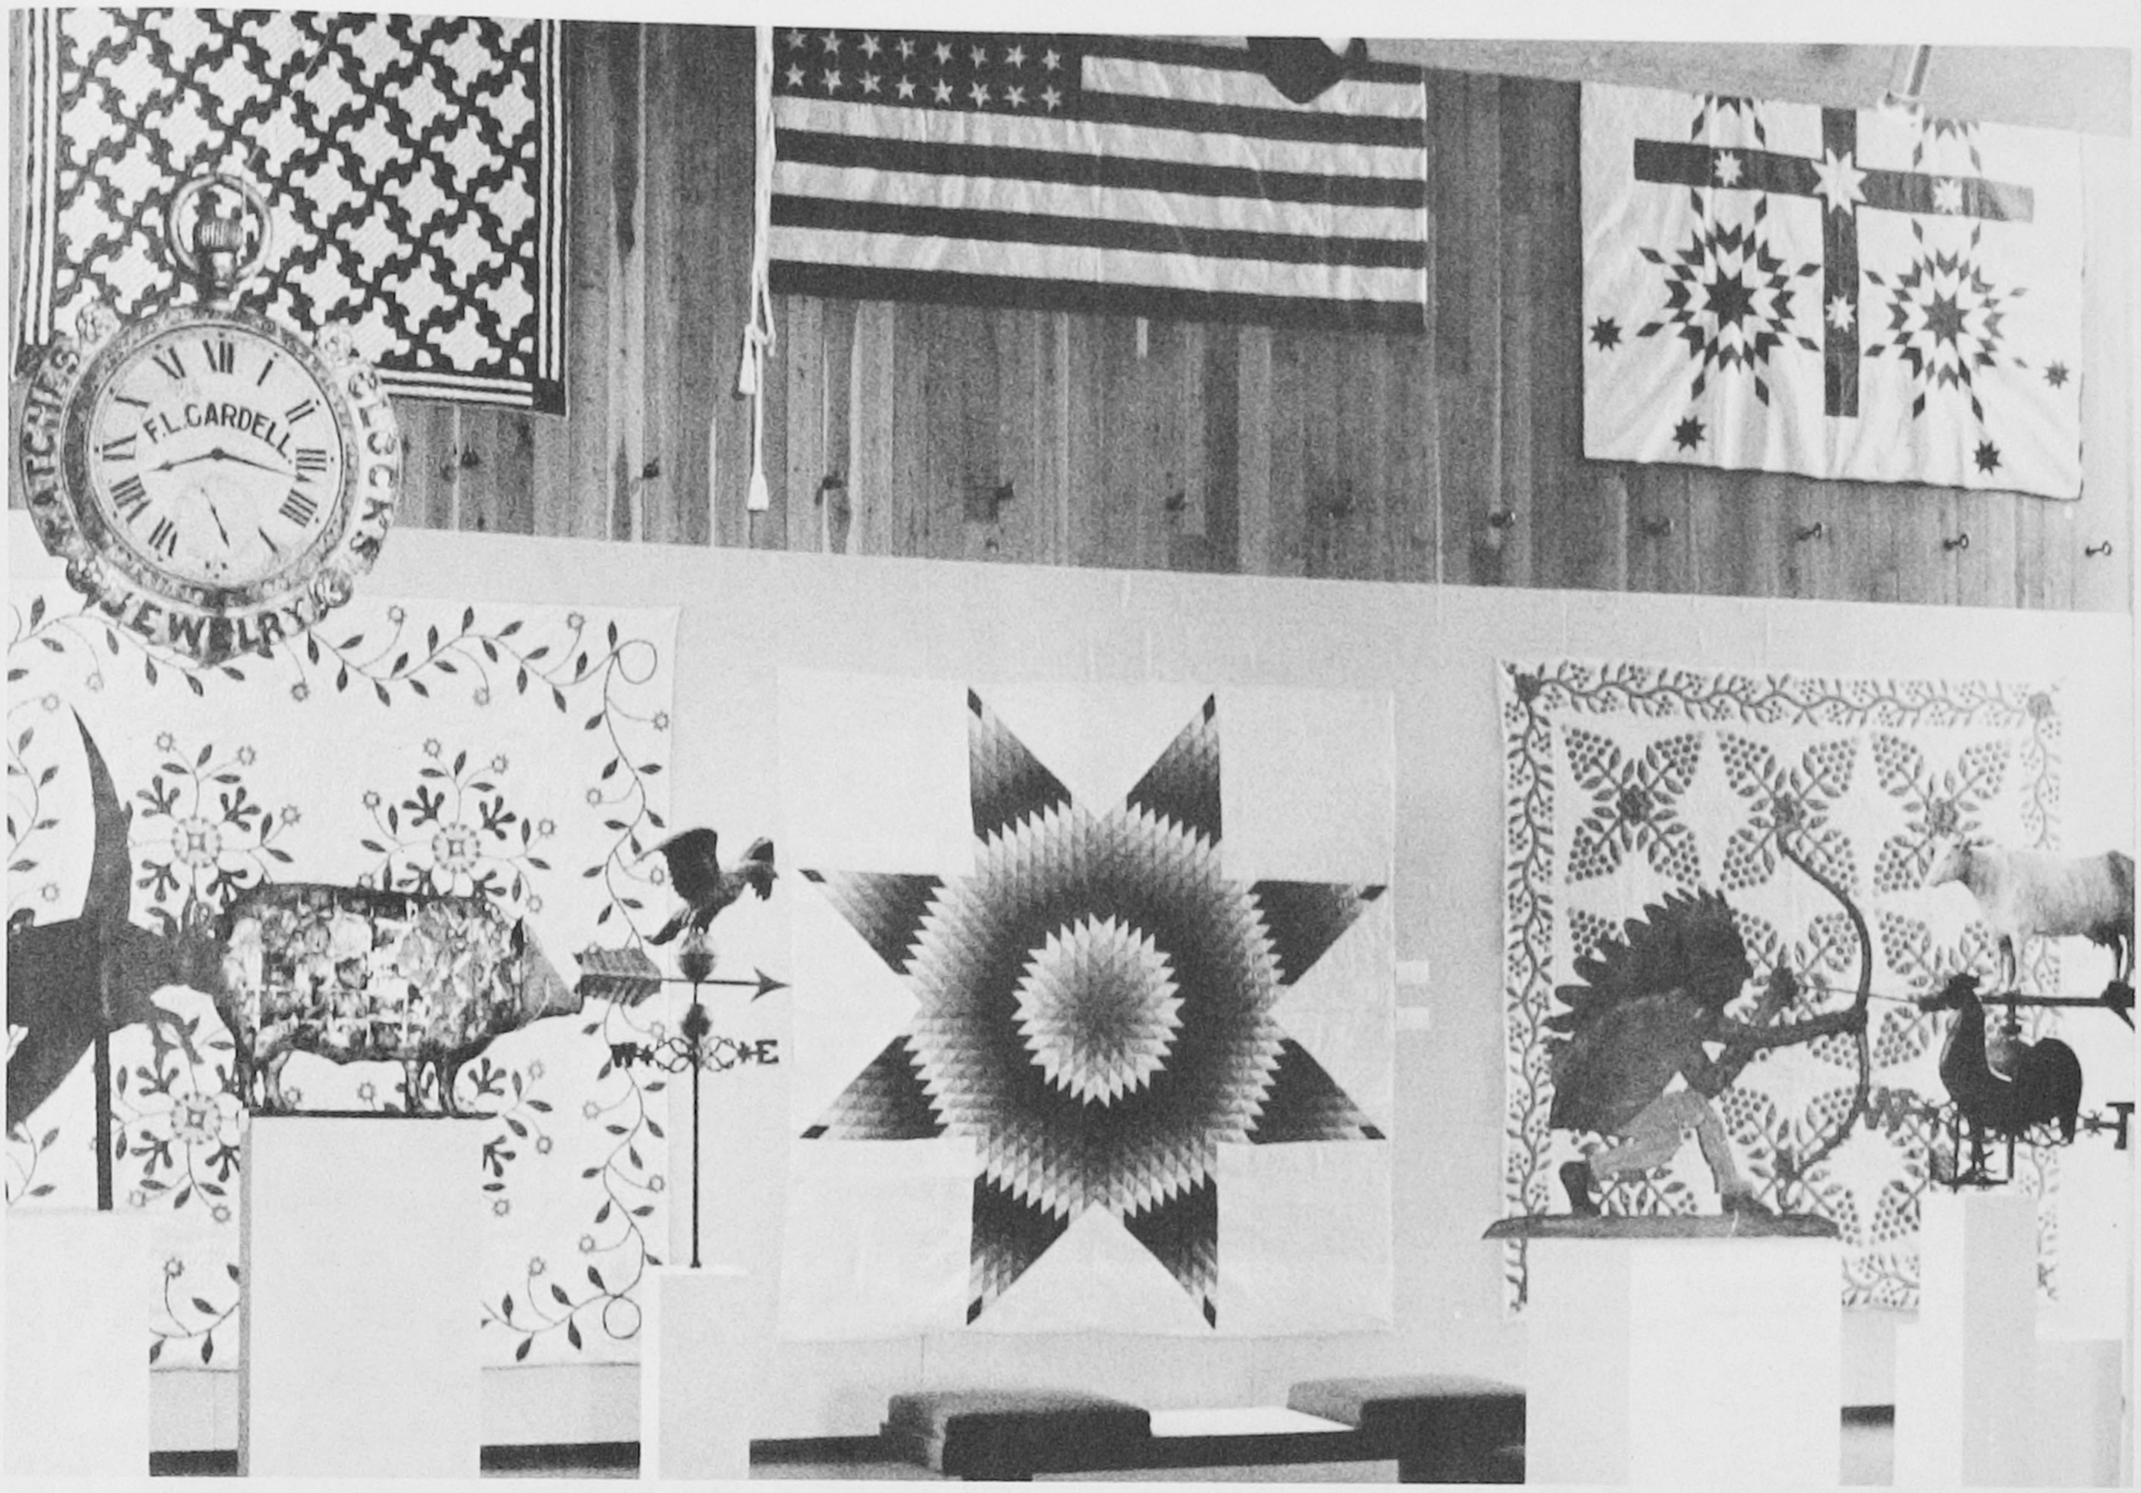
Members of the Judiciary Committee must have found support for their awesome task in the knowledge that our fundamental law has sustained our democracy well for nearly two hundred years. In addition, their deliberations benefited from Madison's speech on executive responsibility and Hamilton's writing on the political character of impeachment for high crimes and misdemeanors.[43]

It might be objected that our Constitution's merits are no longer confirmed by an increasing public strength and national security. Over the years, the Presidency has gained power at the expense of Congress and either constitutional or political reform is necessary to redress the balance. Such reform, it might be said, would return our government to its true principles and make Congress the senior partner in government once again. Have these advocates thought through the consequences of their proposals, as they pertain to our government's capacity to administer national programs for welfare and defense and at the same time provide a national forum for the expression of a multiplicity of interests and opinions? Strengthening Congress, by constitutional or political reform, so it can effectively compete with the President in the initiation of public policies, requires a centralizing of party and Congressional leadership. Decisive Congressional action requires simpler and more permanent majority coalitions. Decentralized sources of political power and expertise would have to be abolished for the stable majority to choose its issues, pass its programs, and safely ignore the minorities. The resulting loss in an effective national representation of many and diverse interests would not be balanced by any gains in administrative efficiency. The new congressional leadership would be competing with the President or—in the extreme case—it would constitute a weaker plural executive of its own. Britain's parliamentary government may or may not be intrinsically superior to our Constitution, but it would not work effectively for a population as large and diversified as ours. Their more disciplined political parties and the limited overlap of executive and legislative offices—in the cabinet—reflects a different version of separation of powers—one which evolved from a monarchy and was not brought into being by any single reform act.

This is not the place for an exhaustive examination of congressional reform. As a constructive prelude to such a study, however, I would like to consider two Watergate examples of how Congress and the courts cooperate to restrain executive power when it threatens the rule of law. Then I shall return to the embittered critic of the Constitution, who views Watergate as a sign that "it didn't work," and, second, to the problem of ambition.



Quilts and Weathervanes

Johnson Gallery's most popular exhibit attracts quilt buffs from all over.

Three years ago Alice Dibble and Phyllis DeMong decided one day over lunch that old quilts and veteran weathervanes were two aspects of Vermont folk art deserving celebration in an art exhibit. Both members of the Friends of Art at Middlebury, Alice is a professional art restorer and a mover-and-shaker among antiquarian-art collectors in the state, who runs a fascinating paintings-and-prints shop in Shoreham; Phyllis is a painter and the owner of Store Two in town.

After finally persuading the College that such folk art was not beneath the dignity of an academic gallery, Alice, with the help of husband Winston and working colleagues Fred Lapham '70 and Martha Lapham, pieced together an exciting exhibit of vintage quilts, woven coverlets, weathervanes, and shop signs that offered something for everybody with antiquarian tastes. As hung and lighted by gallery curator David Bumbeck, artist-in-residence at the College, the colorful show proved the Johnson Gallery's most popular success to date; between June 22nd and August 28th it delighted thousands of visitors, among them quilt collectors from many states.

Although spanning the years from 1810 to 1920, most quilts on display were in like-new condition, having typically been dowry gifts carefully preserved to be handed down to children and grandchildren by their proud owners. Nearly all had been sewn by Vermonters and are owned today by collectors or museums in the state. And, as Mrs. Dibble reports, "This show barely scratched the surface—there are hundreds of great quilts stored away in Vermont homes, that have never been displayed to the public." Most patterns are thought to be one-of-a-kind; either original designs created by ladies in the quilting circle or designs suggested by other quilts they had seen in visits to the homes of friends. Happily, the entire show has been recorded for posterity on color slides.

In the next few pages we present but a small sampling of the items in this beautiful exhibit.

The healthy, strong and bold, cherishes them and is formed a whig by nature."[47] He found the tory nature lining up with the less popular parts of government and the whig nature with the popular branches. But Jefferson's discussion only pertains to the few who are ambitious and capable of an active political life. Such current supporters of Congress as Raoul Berger and Arthur Schlesinger, Jr. are among our more capable and public-spirited citizens. These men of virtue and talents, as Jefferson would call them, support Congress as the senior partner of our constitutional democracy. This would be all right if all citizens shared their virtues. Most Americans prefer to lead private lives, however, and to defer to presidential leadership. In this connection it is instructive, if also ironic, to find one journalist voicing this objection to the presidential removal: "In the world's greatest democracy, as we fondly call it, the system gives us government by appointment only."[48]

Those who object to the scope of presidential power, today, should stop viewing that branch as the entire American government. Congress should be encouraged to exercise its powers vigorously. Still, our separation of powers deliberately provides a branch for the allegiance of the Whigs and another for the allegiance of the Tories. (The courts, after all, are the guardians of individual rights in concrete cases; they are not the primary preservers of political freedom.) Our allegiance to Congress or the Presidency frequently turns on our inclination to support or oppose power. Not even Jefferson thought that this dualism should be eliminated, although he clearly favored the Whig party.

This relationship between the separation of powers and different political natures or inclinations, brings us back to the problem of ambition in republican government. Watergate exhibits our polity's limited solution to the problem while it points to a more complete one. First, Congressmen, judges, prosecutors, lawyers and newsmen gained fame as they acted for the common good. Second, a good citizen must learn how and when to support one or the other political branch of government in order to maintain political freedom. This usually requires supporting men who act from mixed motives. As Lincoln said about Abolitionists and Know Nothings, stand with them when they are right and against them when they are wrong. Such advice seems to require that more citizens become informed about their government and laws. Until a majority of citizens becomes so informed, we will continue to have presidential government with congressional oversight. □

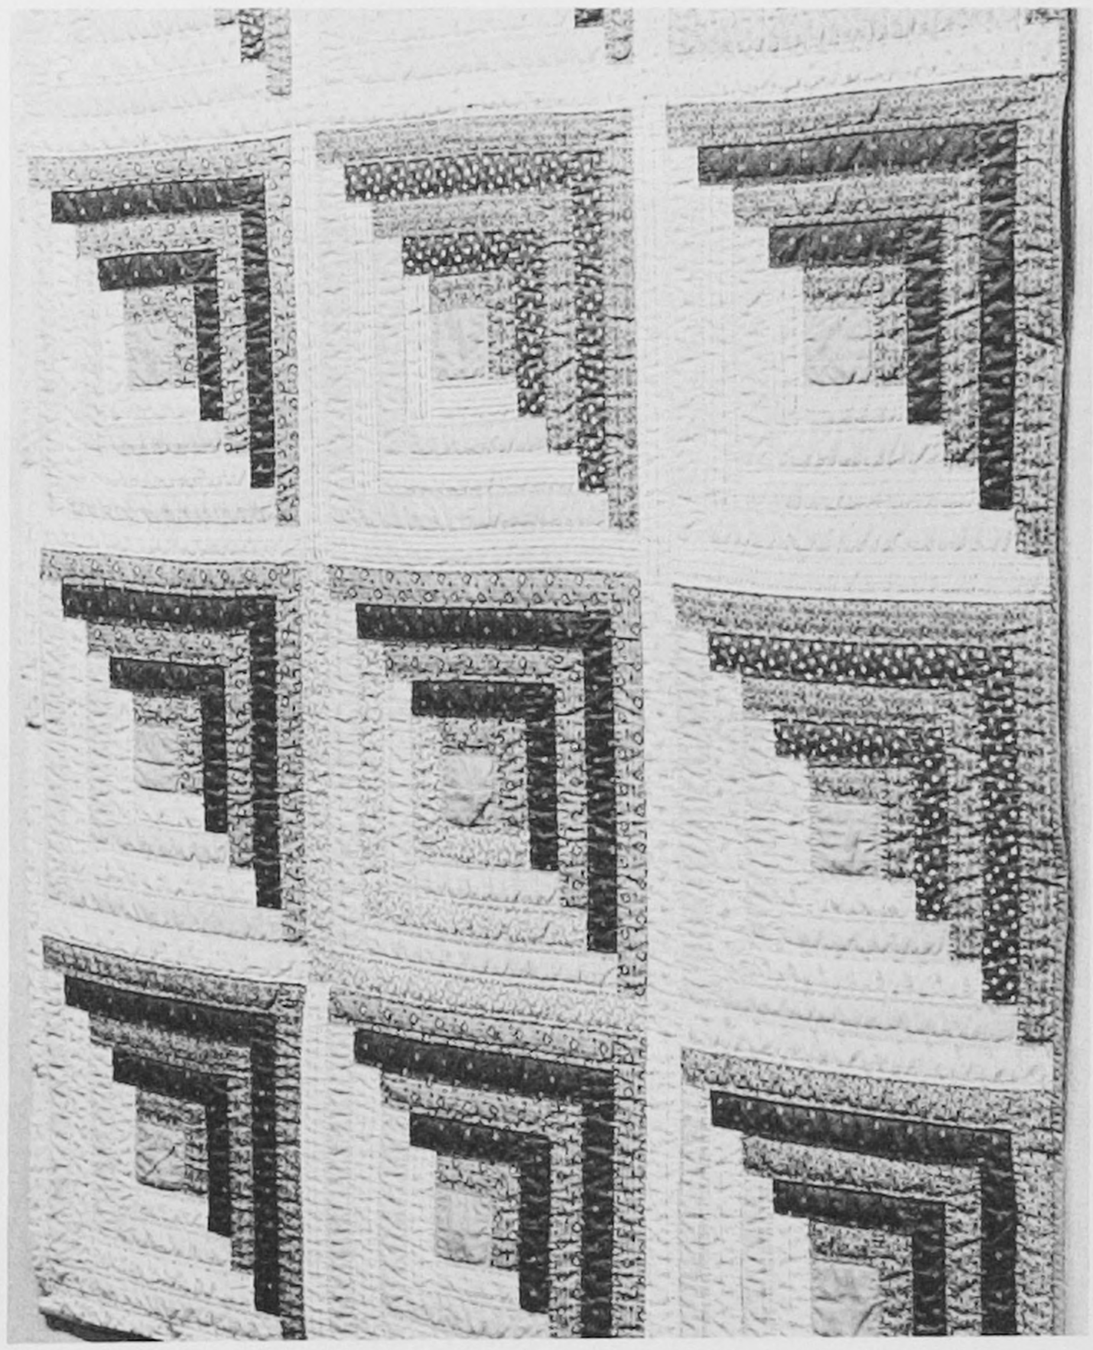
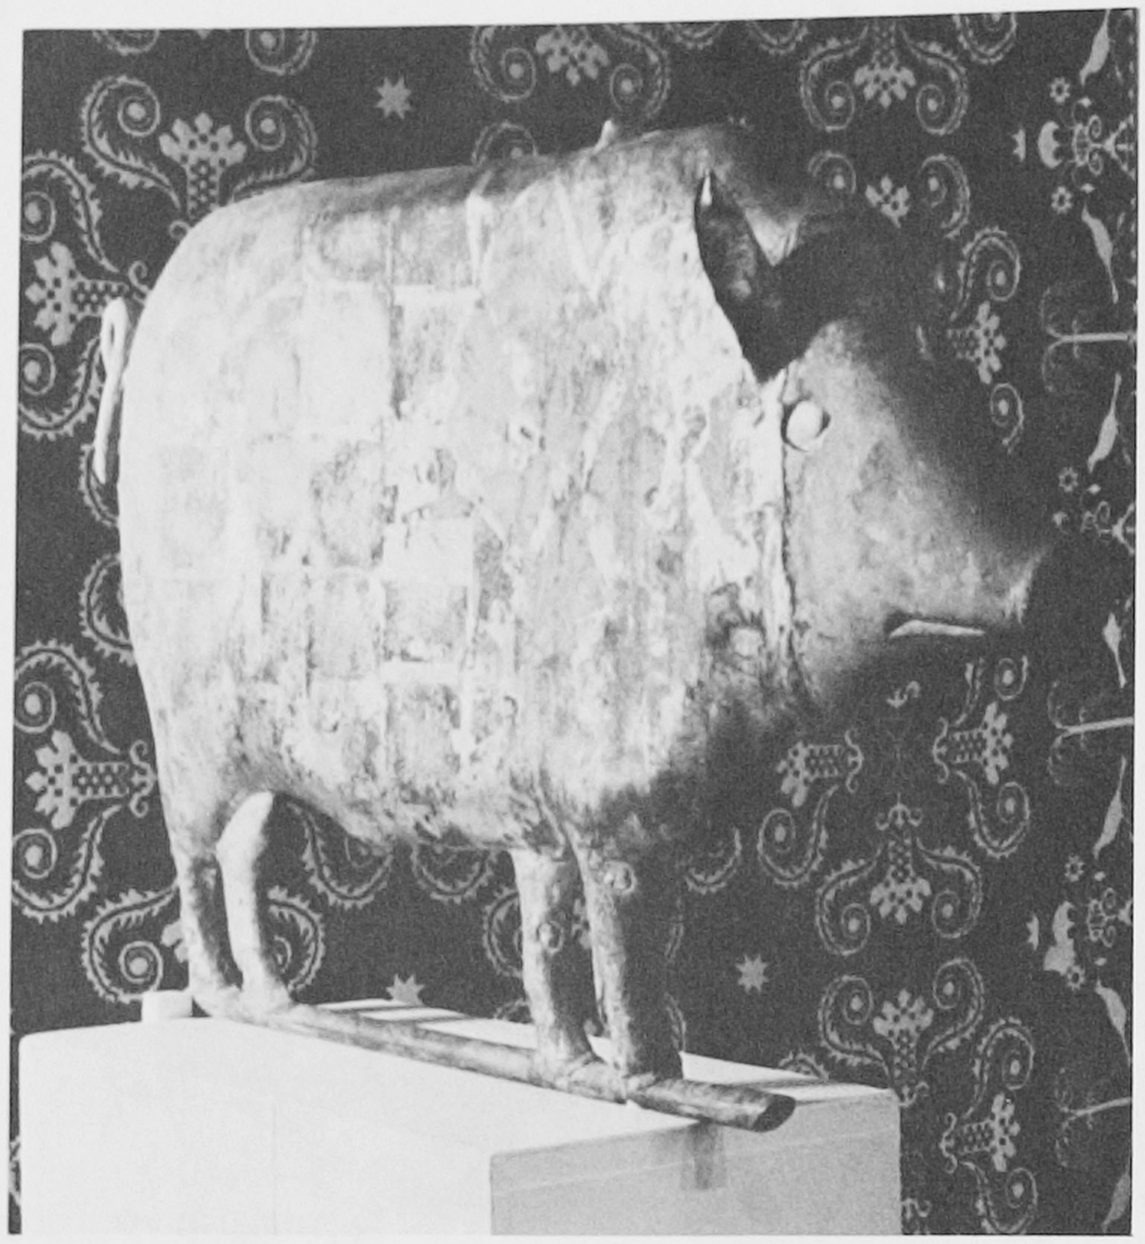
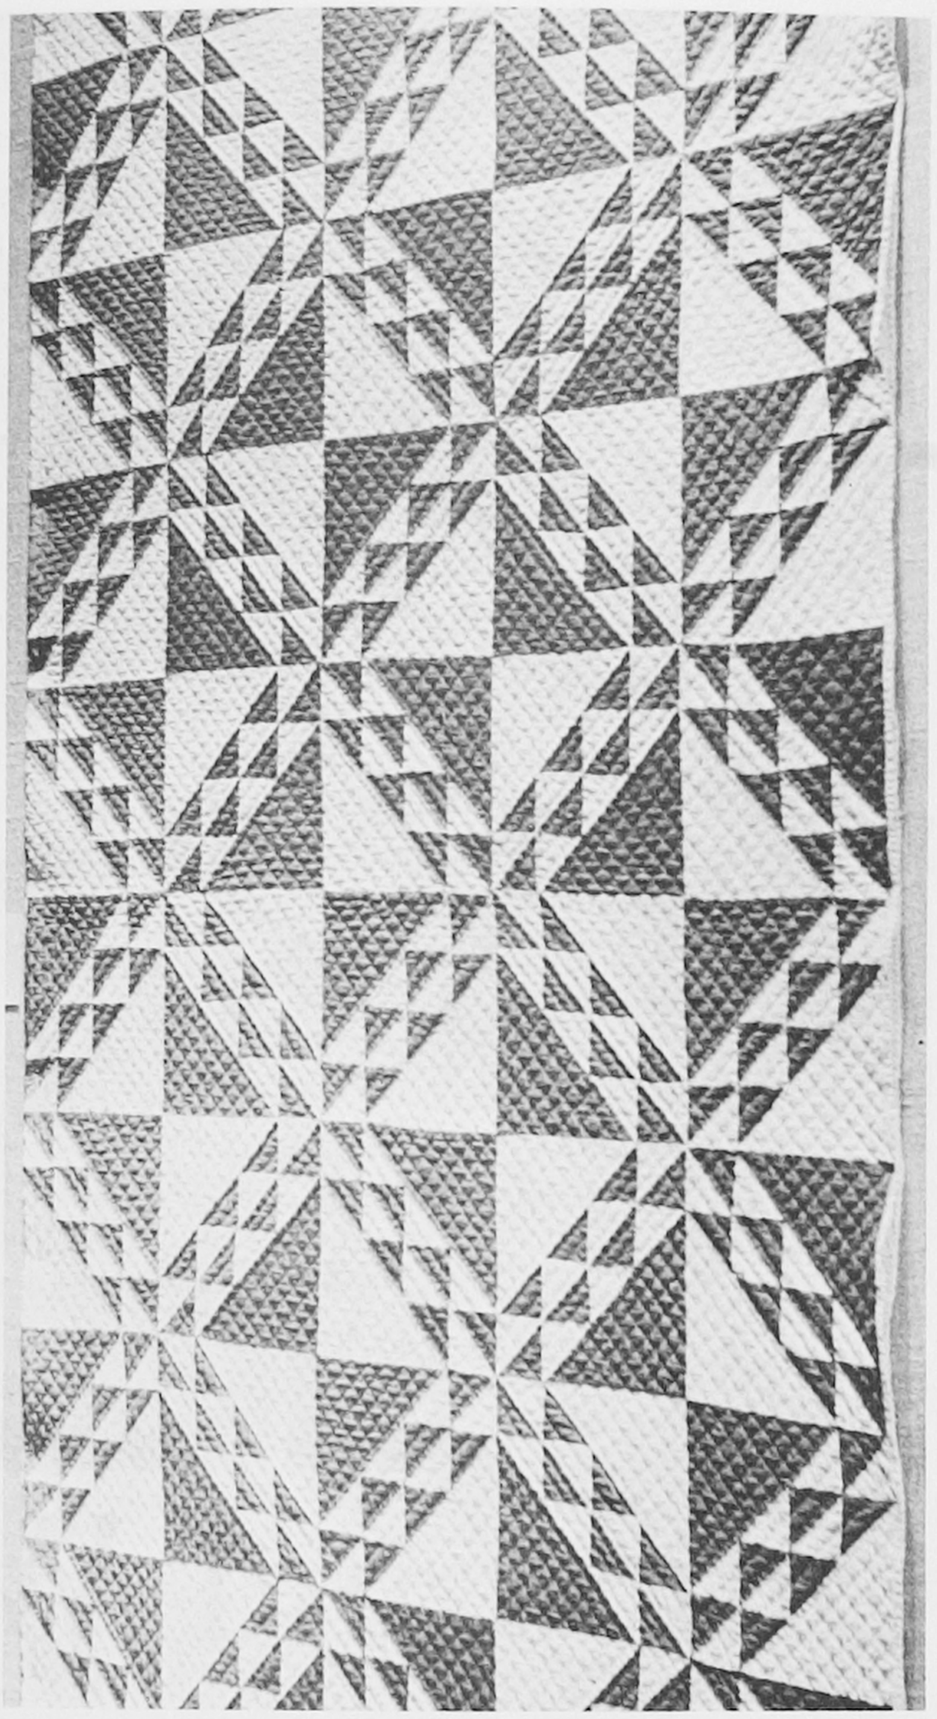
Child's crazy-quilt coverlet with lace fringe includes hand-embroidered childhood scenes; 1870-80.

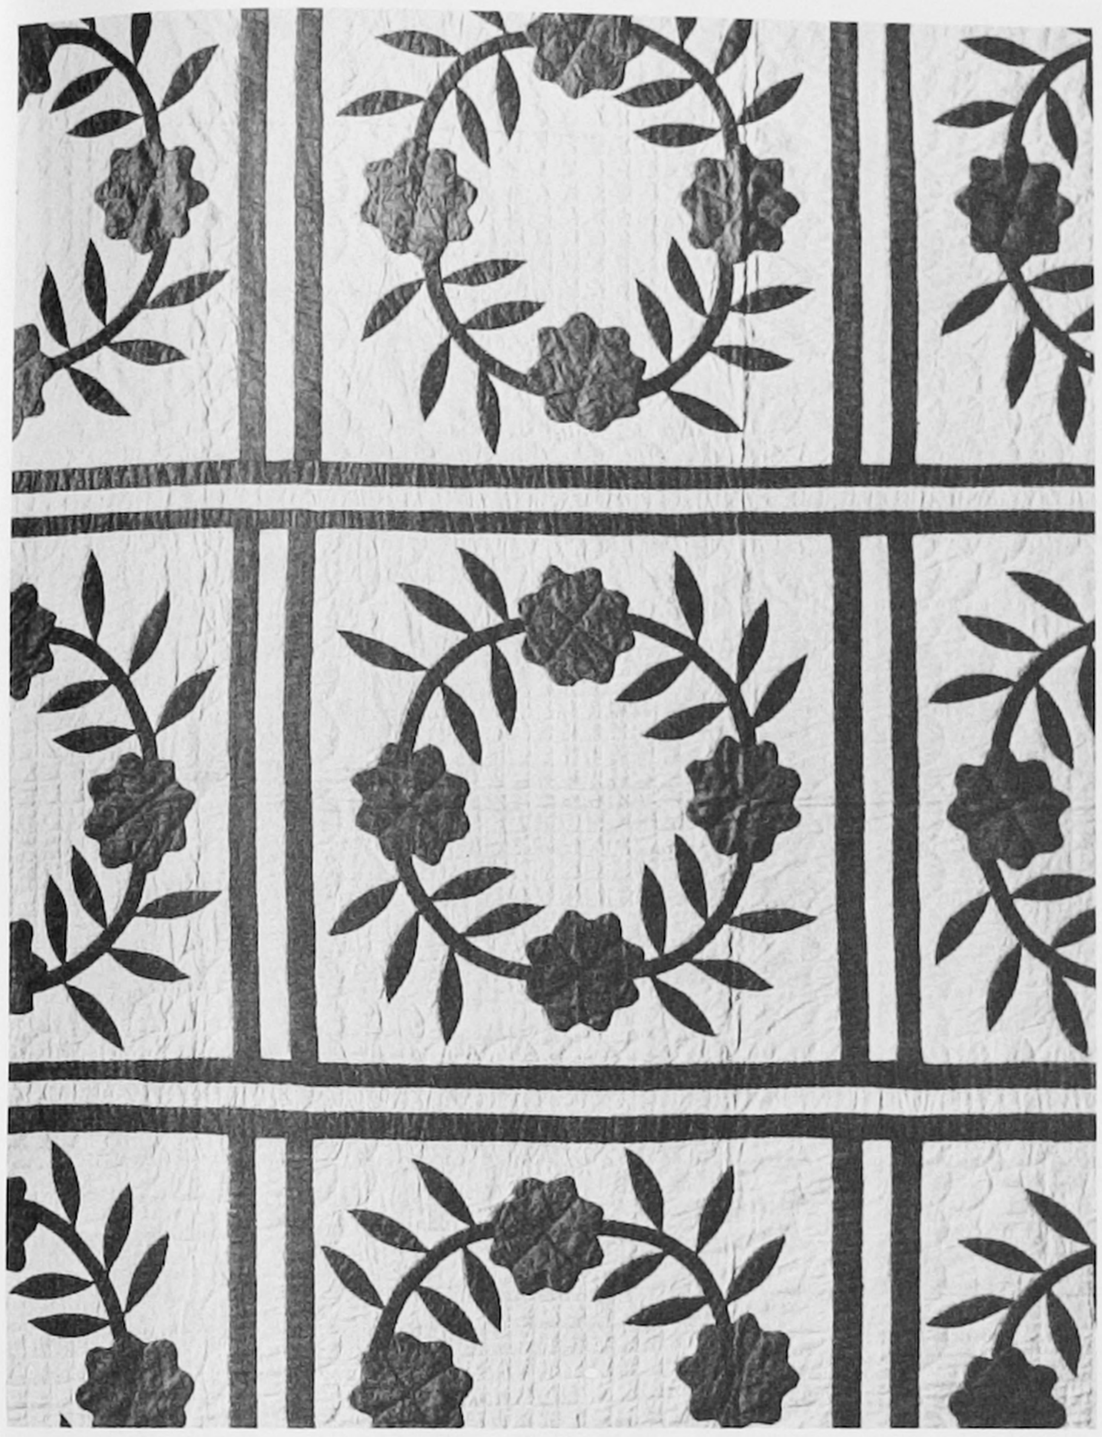
Behind weathered copper eagle, elegant trapunto quilt has appliqued floral design in dark green, red, and tan; early 1800s.

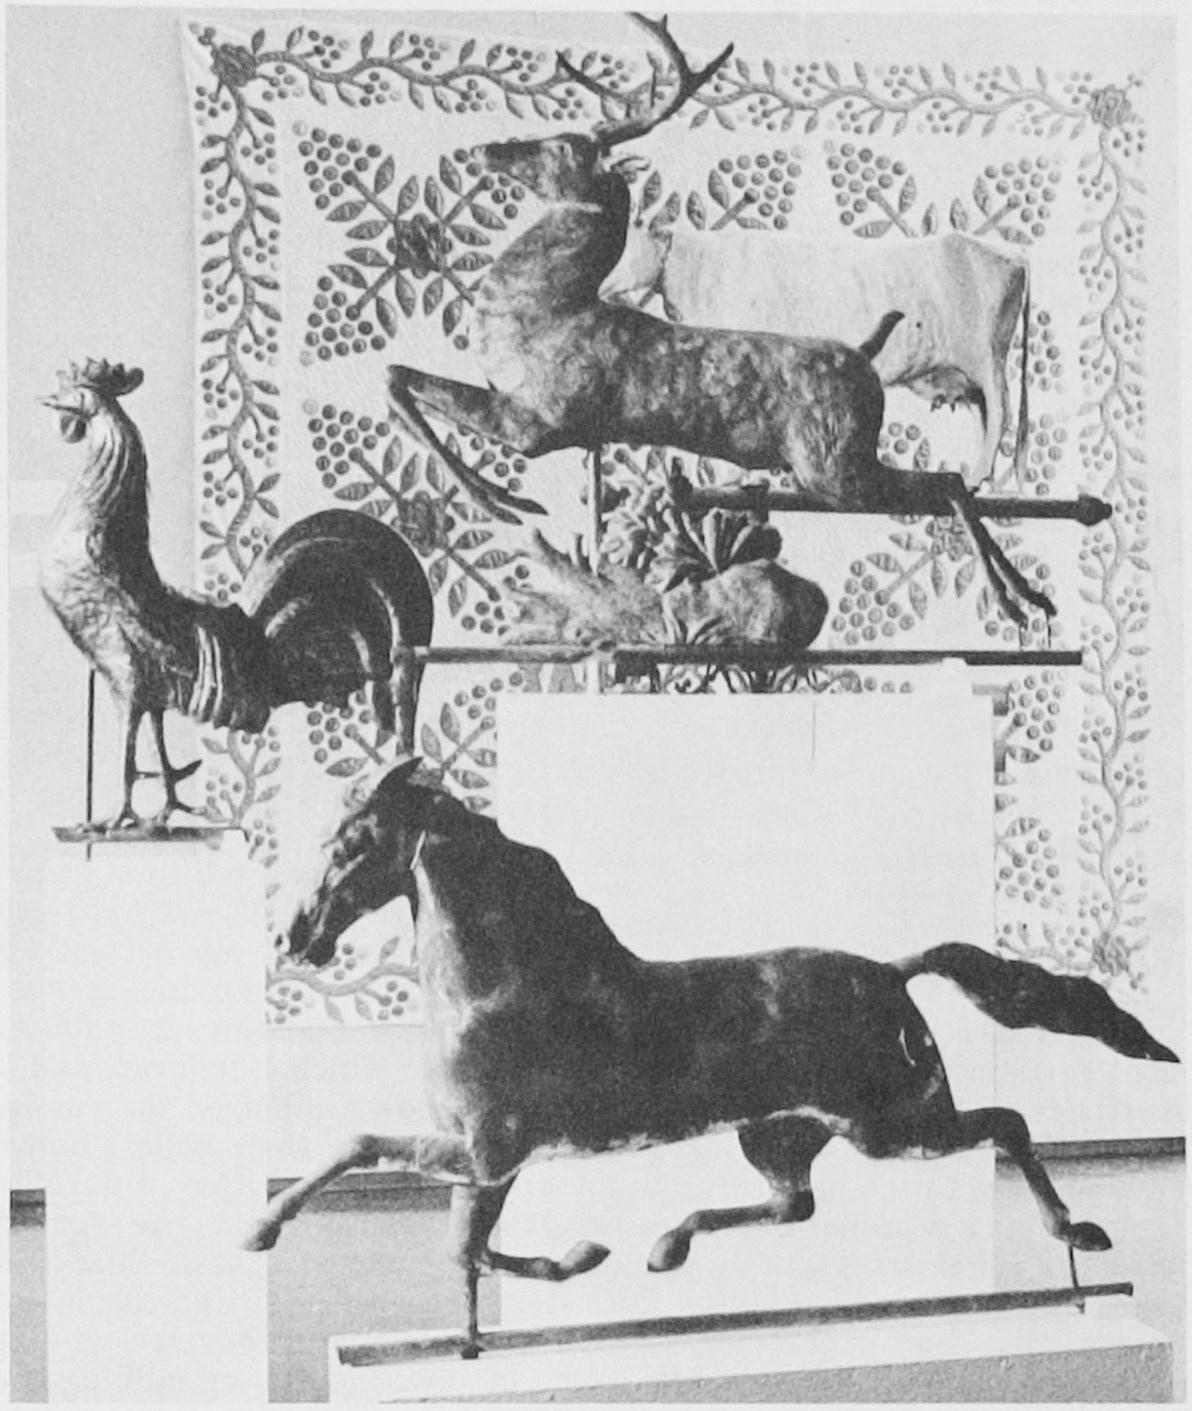




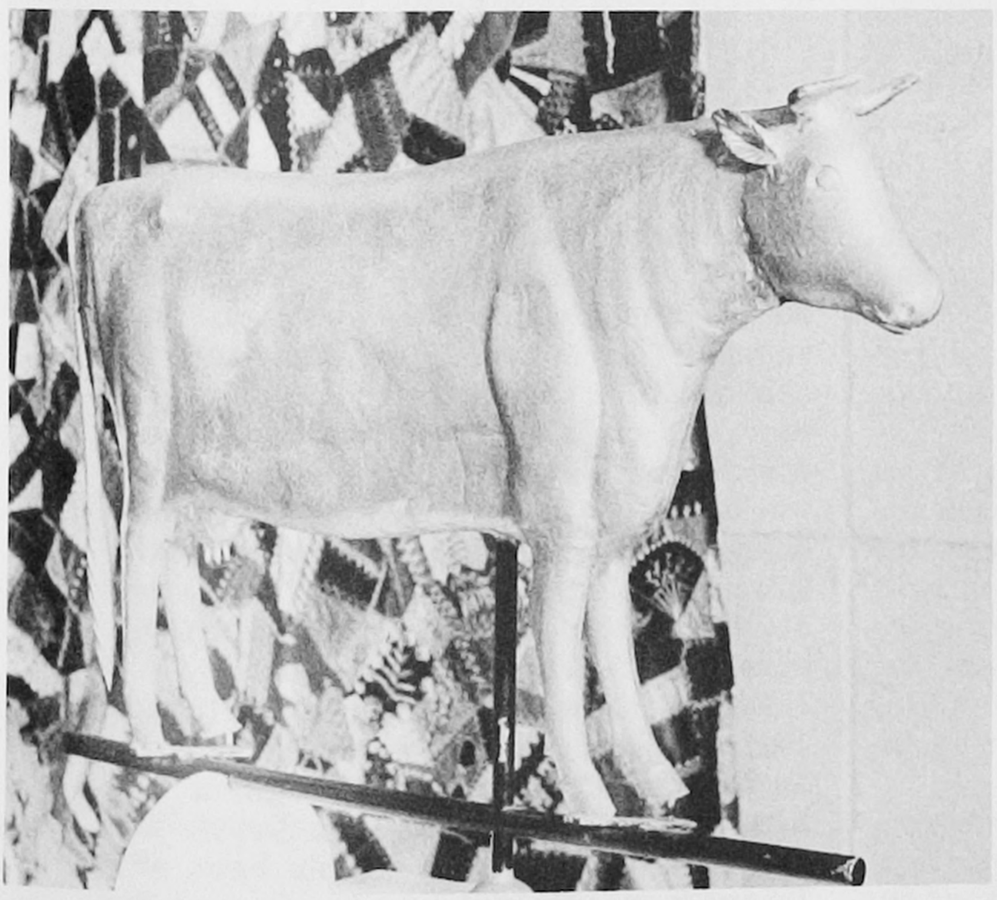


Top left, beaten-copper weathervane was originally gold-leafed but most has weathered away revealing variably oxidized copper. White-on-blue woven coverlet, behind, was made in New York state in 1850s. At left, pinwheel quilt in warm green and terra cotta dates from mid-1830s. Above, bright red and white semaphore design; 1840s. Opposite page, 1810 quilt behind cock and stag has green vine with red or yellow blossoms on white ground. Far right, strong three-dimensional coffer effect is achieved with alternate blue and olive strips on "shadow" side, opposite pink or white strips on "sunny" side; 1840s.

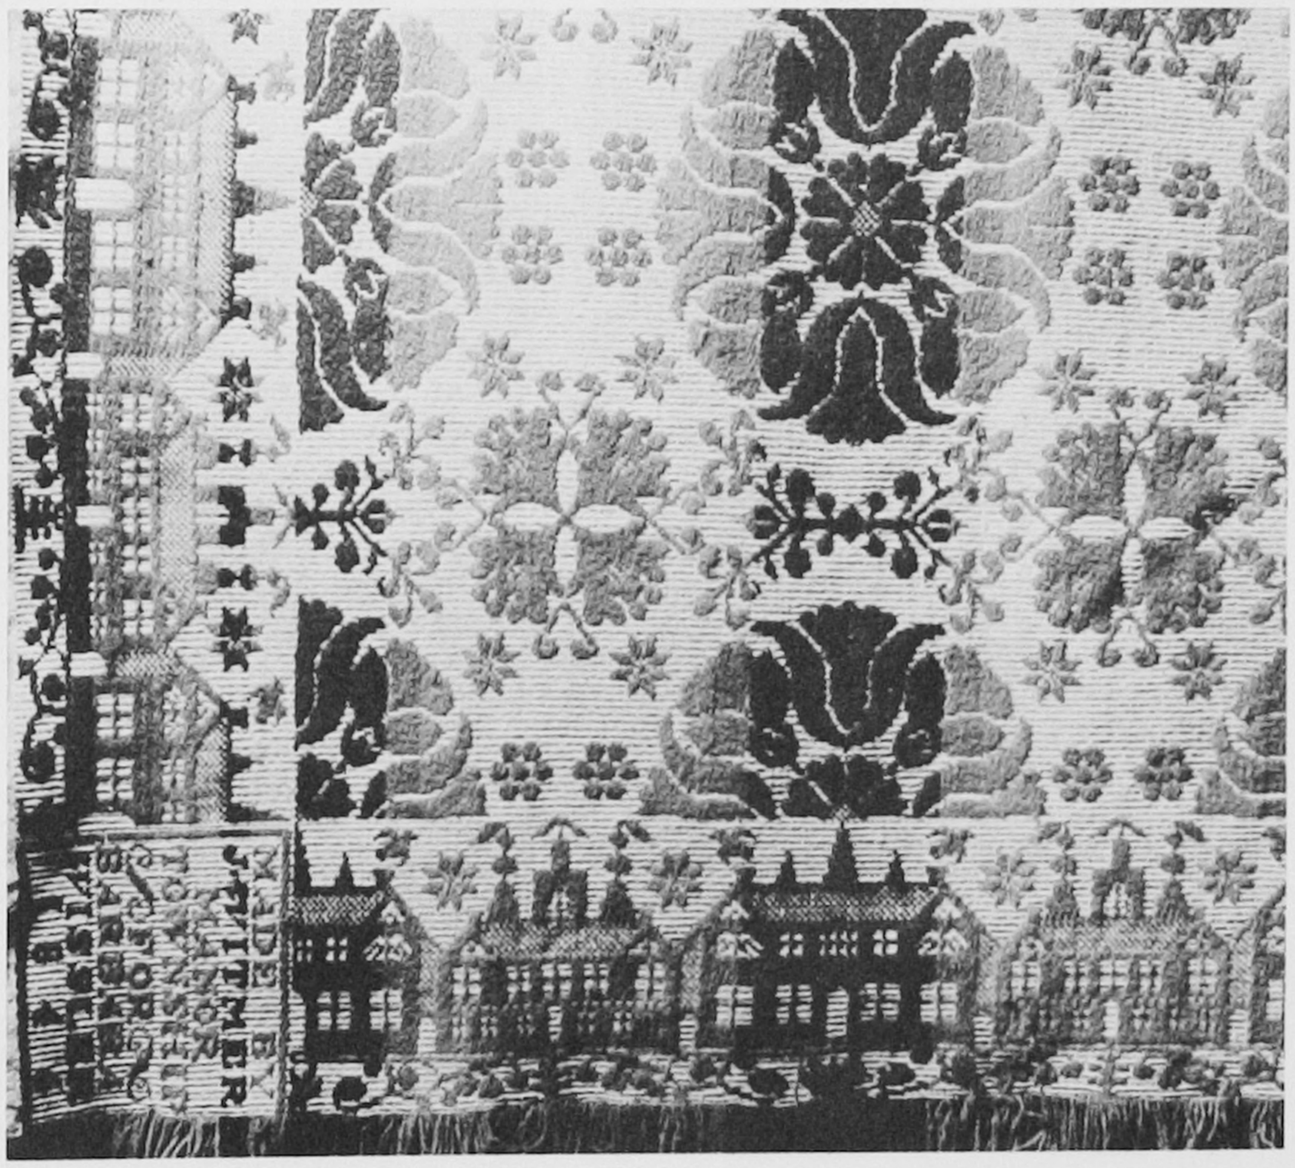


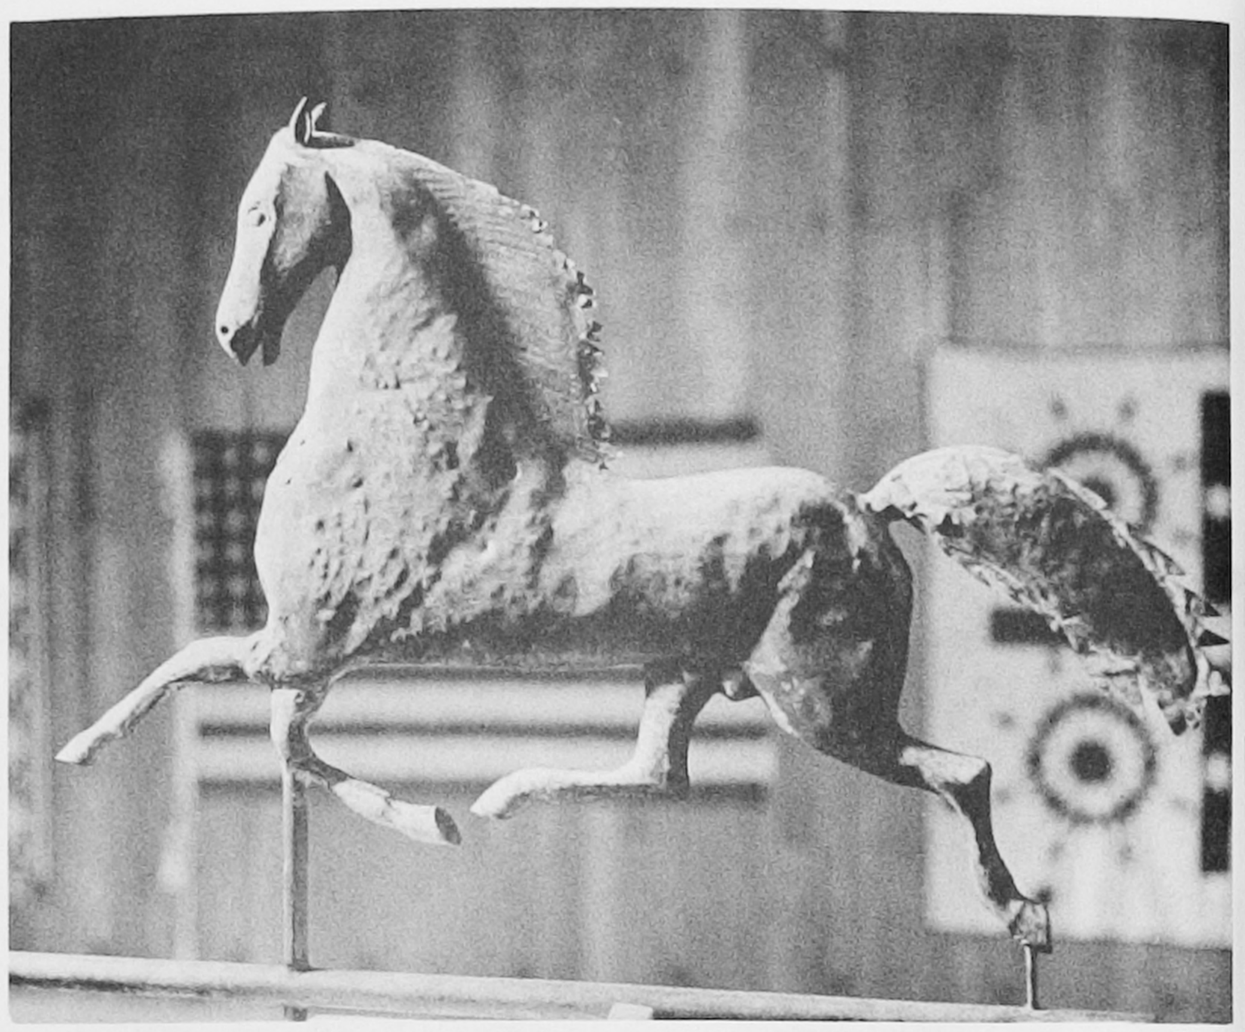


Red flowers and divider bars, with green vine "hoops", enliven this 1835-40 quilt; right, a menagerie of weathervanes.

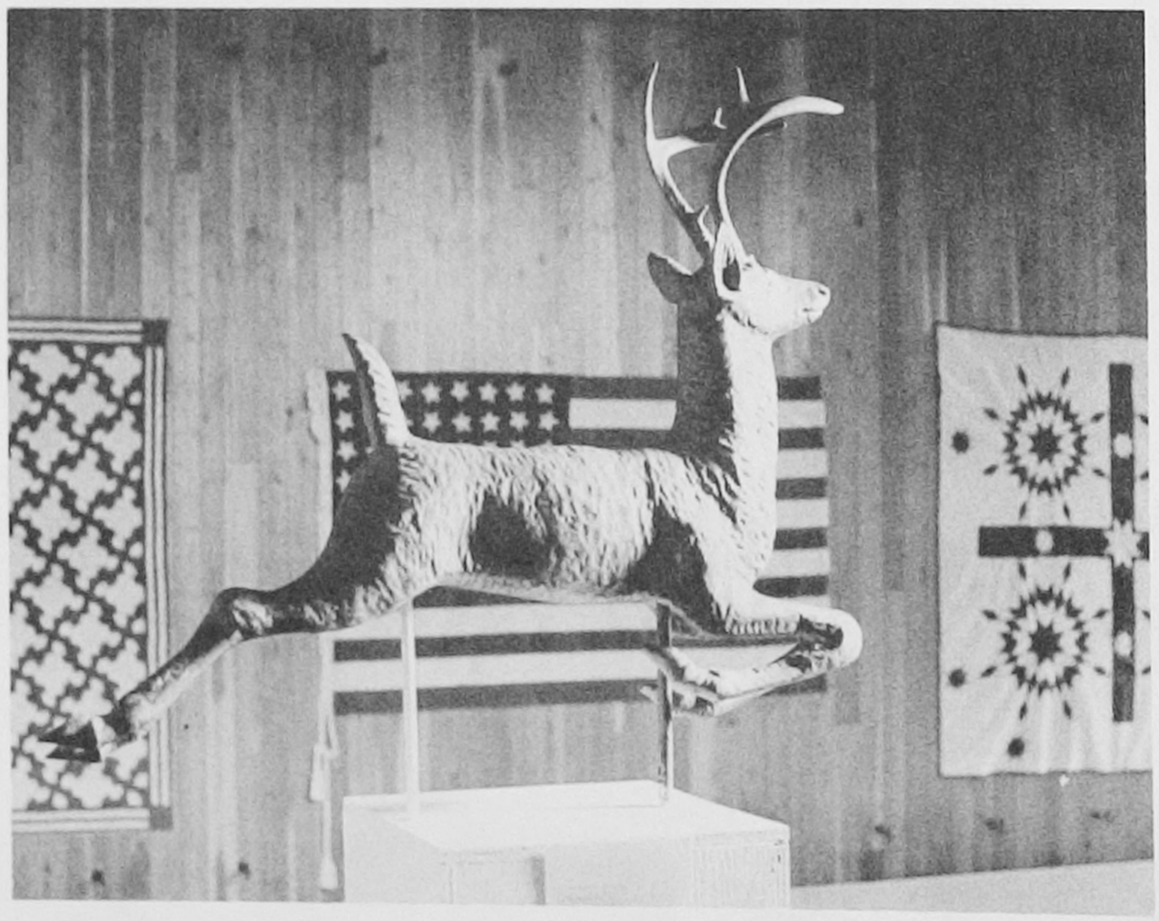


Rather wooden-stanced golden calf is richly gold-leafed copper, 30 inches high. At right, design of "Ohio" coverlet (1846) is woven in broad bands of red and navy blue, with narrow divider bands in olive, on ecru ground.





Left, 1815 quilt uses fine-patterned brick-red diagonals and blocks, with dark green oak leaves. Above, trotting horse with bronze head but hollow copper body pivots below front legs for sensitive response to shifting breezes.



Behind proud stag, airborne above Johnson Gallery's balustrade, is a quilted American flag dating from World War I era. At right, one of noblest dowry quilts in exhibit has lavish trapunto work overlaid with lotus (?) design in Williamsburg blue and with outer fringe of blossoms in rich red.

Alumni Tour

Dear Gordie:

You are probably receiving all kinds of reports of the Majorca trip but I just want to add ours.

We had a wonderful time, notwithstanding the three-hour wait before take off at Logan, and the early departure from Majorca.

All service was excellent and the hotel very nice—thoughtful, accommodating and pleasant. We had a room with balcony and flower-boxed geraniums at the Lenix where we overlooked the garden, swimming pool, and the Majorca Harbor, with many foreign vessels entering and leaving all times of day. The food was very good and we could alternate at the neighboring Victoria if we wished to. Incidentally, we took the all-day trip to Madrid and didn't return until after the dining room had closed. There was a delicious tray of cold ham, roast beef, chicken, rolls, salad, a basket of fruit, and bottled water in our room.

The Arthur Travel Service is to be complimented on their personnel, their choice of hotels, and particularly, on their excellent program planning.

We have been on other college tours . . . and thought this equalled, if not surpassed, them in organization, thoughtfulness and welfare of the travelers.

The only suggestion I have to make as far as Middlebury is concerned is to send out a list of names, addresses and class of alumni going, so that those in a particular area might get together for transportation to or from Logan, for instance. Also you might suggest to Arthur's that groups be in the same hotel so they can do things together. (There were several groups on this tour and we had to have the Bureau Director announce a meeting area so we would know one another.)

We considered it a wonderful trip, a great bargain, and really surprised that more Middlebury alumni, especially in the Boston area, did not take advantage of the opportunity.

Hope you can go next time!

To the Editor:

I have a few comments on the summer News Letter. Primarily, I think more people would have been interested in reading the commencement address of Ms. FitzGerald than the baccalaureate address of President Armstrong. If there is room in the fall News Letter, a reprint of her address could be put there. Also, it is rare that a person of such stature as Zero Mostel attends the campus and there are no interviews with the person or personal comments recorded. Judging from the note of graduation, Mr. Mostel provided a refreshing change to a normally boring function, and his absence from the News Letter was bad judgment by the editorial staff.

Finally, I think having Dean O'Brien explain the present status of the fraternities was a poor choice. Dean O'Brien's credibility with the fraternities and their alumni is poor so that anything he writes will be viewed skeptically. In my opinion, it would have been better for someone from the Working Group to explain the progress, with remarks from Dean O'Brien interspersed.

Letters

[In Spring, 1971 we reprinted under the heading "One Man's Experience" an account in the Washington Post of the reactions of Lynn Moore '48, a film maker working for the Navy, to what he observed in Vietnam and on the streets of Washington, where in November 1969 thousands of student demonstrators were being gassed, truncheoned, and/or arrested. With a wife and four children, Lynn quit his $21,000 job for reasons of conscience. Having learned last year that he had moved to San Francisco and changed his given names, we wrote this summer asking Mr. Moore for an update on his activities and outlook.—Ed.]

Dear Gregor:

Your letter of July 22nd finds me today in Darwin, at the "Top End" of Australia. I have been here for about a month. You ask me to bring you up to date on what's been happening in my professional and personal life since our last letters in February 1971, around the time you ran that Washington Post story on my Viet Nam experience.

I can sum up these past 3½ years in one word: change. It is a familiar thing for people in the middle-years. In early 1971 I was living in Washington, D. C. with my family. Now I am living alone, having separated from my wife in 1971; we were divorced in early 1972. Both of us had experienced many changes and together we received insights into our relationship which enabled us to part sensibly and in friendship. She has discovered hidden talents and interests which, since our divorce, have resulted in a published book, a new career as a scientific artist, and a burst of creative energy which has carried her and my children into a new life.

After my own experience in Viet Nam and Cambodia and my resignation from the Navy, I dropped out of motion pictures. I have not worked in the field since. In contrast to those 20 years I worked "achieving" as a film writer/producer, I have spent the past 3½ years going from job to job, travelling in between, and seeking new experiences to enrich my life. I have worked mostly as an office worker and a laborer: in a cannery, on a farm as a migratory worker, in several restaurants as a dishwasher/busboy, and in many, many offices where I have found my high-school-acquired skills as a typist in great demand. I discovered the world of the "Temporary", where you can work when you want, as long as the job lasts, and can always move on to another office.

It was an interesting experience, those many months, and I was fortunate to meet interesting people in similar circumstances, and to be turned-on to issues that had only been remote to my consciousness as a middle-class bureaucrat: woman's rights; white racism; and the sickness of our corporate state and its exploitation of the working class. In short, I had my eyes opened, and I'm glad my work experiences extended over such a long period of time and to so many places, because I now have new understanding of some of the forces which are propelling the U.S. toward a major economic and political upheaval.

The Post article you reprinted indicated that my protest against the Navy film I was producing was my first experience standing up publicly for something in which I believed, and it mentioned . . . how I admired the young men who stood up for their beliefs and refused to serve in the military during Viet Nam, some even leaving the country for Canada. You see a lot of this, these days, in other aspects of life: people not working for a company they feel is ripping off the environment, or milking consumers for big profits with substandard products, or contributing to the economic agony of the farm workers. In the years since my own rather hesitant protest, I have encountered similar situations, in which I have seen more clearly heavy moral/ethical issues in my work and in my life; I have not always responded in ways I am proud of; I've made some decisions I've regreted (like taking an editorial job with a company who was promoting the construction of a nuclear power plant in a lovely town in Massachusetts); and I've found myself at the center of some rather uncomfortable inner conflicts. Perhaps the Viet Nam thing was the beginning, and I see now that when it comes to conscience, it's not only the big things that count, but the little issues which are much more common in one's life . . . like buying lettuce you know is grown by farmers who are fighting the farm workers, or buying gas from a company who is polluting the ocean.

Like so many people, I became disturbed over the Watergate revelations last summer, especially the proof that our electoral process had been largely manipulated by corporate interests through illegal contributions, and that self-serving public servants had been involved in manipulations which made mockery of our government and its high goals. After wallowing in the televised Watergate hearings, I decided to take a vacation from America: if I didn't like it, I would leave it. At age 48 I now have few illusions about my ability to help change our government; after Watergate I became convinced that the present system is sick, and that capitalism as we know and practice it is at the basis of our illness. So I began to explore emigration to Australia, a country I have long admired, and which is now going through many of the changes the U. S. must make if it is to survive as a democracy.

Parallel to my growing feelings of anger and frustration about America, there came hope in another form: quite late in life I discovered God, and received proof of how He moves in my life. Some years ago I was fortunate to have come in contact with young people who shared with me their spiritual experiences; many centered on the "New Religions", Oriental concepts then unfamiliar to me. After coming to San Francisco, I joined a spiritual brotherhood and began to experience many changes in my life. For the first time I began to feel the power of God, and I began to see new meaning in the world and in events which have puzzled me for so long. In a matter of months, this new perspective gave me hope for the future, optimism about Man, and focused my attention on the value of hard work as a major way of achieving God's grace.

It is the practice of my spiritual group to change our names; we believe it launches a person on a new spiritual path, gives them a firm goal to achieve in their spiritual lives. In early 1973 I took the Muslim name, Rasjad, and my mother's maiden name, Townsend. That summer, as I was investigating job opportunities in Australia, I had an opportunity to visit my group's spiritual center in Indonesia. I lived there for six weeks during the Holy Fast of Ramadahn. I then travelled to Australia, where I found a job as an Audiovisual Librarian at the newly established Darwin Community College. Returning briefly to the U.S. for an immigration visa, I returned here in July. I feel I have, here in Darwin, an excellent opportunity to begin a new life, in a new profession, on Australia's last frontier. I like the people here, and I have a meaningful job . . . free of the manipulation which characterizes most film-making, television production, and public relations efforts. We Americans are so wrapped up in ourselves and in Love of Country that it's unthinkable to leave one's homeland in a quest for a BASIC HORSEMANSHIP, English and Western—A complete Guide for Riders and Instructors. By Eleanor F. Prince and Gaydell M. Collier '57. New York: Doubleday, 1974 xxviii + 342, pp., illus., $8.95.

The first great work of western literature, the Iliad, commences with a song of the hard anger of Achilles and closes, some fifteen thousand lines later, with the sad ceremonies of Hector's funeral. Lest this seem an odd opening observation in a review of a book entitled Basic Horsemanship, let me hasten to quell confusion by quoting (from the Lattimore translation) the final line of that poem: "Such was their burial of Hector, breaker of horses." For a consideration of the continuing implications of this epithet, hippodamoio, breaker, or tamer, of horses, which ends the Iliad, is at the center of what I wish to reflect upon in making an assessment of the achievement of this fine book.

Eleanor Prince and Gaydell Maier Collier '57, have written a book about horsemanship which is basic in a number of important respects. Its first great act of courage is in addressing a readership which is presumed to have no prior knowledge of horses. That is, it undertakes one of the more difficult tasks of communication, the presentation and representation of truly elementary and absolutely essential matters, such as how a horse walks, or what specifically occurs in each of the standard gaits, or what is involved in properly mounting or sitting a horse. No simple matters these, though to some they may seem so. A combination of lucid prose, clear and uncluttered photographs (of which there are nearly 100 throughout the book), and helpful and often witty line drawings and sketches move the inexperienced to secure understanding, and command, I would expect, the admiration of the more expert. (Since I fall into the former category I must speculate about the latter.) And the progression from first things, through a fully articulated and illustrated sequence of lessons, to the various fruits of achieved competence—jumping, trail riding, shows and competitions, and the arts of advanced equitation, including hunting, polo, gymkhana, dressage, rodeo, and even Olympic events—is at all points lucid, informative, admirably balanced. Interpolated throughout are sections of special advice to instructors which have the ring of real experience in teaching, and at the end there are a glossary, recommendations for further reading, and four appendices, the first of which, on the horse and equipment, has eighteen fine informative sketches.

But this book offers more than information and instruction; it urges an attitude: "Good horsemanship entails understanding, patience, and love; in short, mental equilibrium as well as physical equilibrium." In urging the pursuit of these worthy mental, social, and moral virtues, the book reminds us of how large the horse continues to loom on the landscapes of our imaginations. For, whether as military leaders we mount in the pursuit of heroism in battle or in a decline of spirit envisage ourselves as centaurs, how we relate and react to the reality of horses defines our characters. That is why the Homeric epithet hippodamoio was attributed to only great or noble persons. In that world there was honor in being recognized as a tamer of horses. And it seems to me that in our world there is great virtue in being a teacher/writer of basic horsemanship.
